Get the habit of paying your accounts when statements are presented—it's a good one. Put it off from month to month is poor business policy—and besides your negligence might be keeping the other fellow from meeting his obligations promptly. Had you ever looked at it in this way? Well just such negligence is what has put collections "on the bum." The finest asset that any business man can possess, it matters not what his line of business may be, is that of paying his accounts when statements are presented him.

Lord Decies and Miss Vivien Gould were married in New York recently. The bride is 18 years old, the groom is 44. The bride is worth many millions in her own right, the groom's wealth is not given but is supposed to be in the neighborhood of 40 cents, heavily encumbered. The train of the bride's wedding gown was seventeen feet long and was heavily weighted with ornaments of gold and silver; the only part of the groom's wedding attire worthy of mention was a sword and a pair of patent leather boots. The money of the Goulds was made on southern railroads, which are the poorest equipped roads in the country and give [illegible] money than any other transportation lines known. Of course Mr. Gould has a right to use his money as he pleases, and since he has elected to purchase a lord of ancient vintage for his daughter other people should have nothing to say, and yet we cannot resist the temptation to say we wish he had given the money to some hard-working American youth and used the money in building a few new depots on the T. & P. and putting new shirts on the chairs in the passenger coaches.—Honey Grove Signal.

Who Was There That You Knew?

IN the shadowy ranks of those who marched to defeat or death or victory fifty years ago in the mighty conflict that convulsed this great nation, is there father or grandfather or uncle of yours? Would you like to see a photograph of him in that long ago day of his youth—a photograph that he never knew was taken? Perhaps we can show you one; and in any case, we can tell you a story, stranger than any detective fiction of 3,500 priceless photographs that were lost and are found again.

3,500 Long Buried Photographs of the Civil War

THEY were taken by the greatest photographer in the United States of that day; they were bought by the United States Government for $30,000; they were buried in the War Department for 50 years—they are buried there still. But a duplicate set was kept by the photographer—who died poor and broken down; that duplicate set was knocked from pillar to post for nearly 50 years, until it was discovered by a New England collector. J. Pierpont Morgan tried to secure the collection—Ex-President Garfield and General Benjamin F. Butler said it was worth $150,000—yet with the help of the Review of Reviews, the entire collection has been gathered into 10 great volumes and is placed within your reach at less than the value of one of the photographs. It is the one accurate, impartial history of the Civil War—for the camera cannot lie. It tells the story of the War you never heard before. Taken under protection of the Secret Service, these photographs bring to light thousands of little-known phases of the war; they penetrate to strange places and record strange things.

The value of woman's clubs has frequently been questioned, sometimes in high places, but the council of these organizations in Kansas City has taken upon itself a service that promises large benefit to an important social class. It proposes to place a notice in every railroad station in Missouri asking every country girl coming to that city for work or study to notify some woman's club two weeks in advance, when efforts will be made to [illegible] her, if desired, or in any event to put her in touch with safe associations and wholesome influences. In these days the value of such assistance is obvious.

The Mexican Revolution.

The suppression, of and censorship over, actual conditions by the Mexican Government no longer avails and Washington has been officially advised that enormous amounts of arms and ammunition and men are crossing from this side of the Rio Grande, and Washington has ordered the Third Cavalry to patrol the [illegible] of Texas at night, and [illegible] o'clock, because [illegible] this step is eminently right but [illegible] stock, and go out doors to get a drink, and find the cistern on the blink. We lived like horses in those days, and yet, much to my own amaze, I brag and brag in prose and rhymes, about the good old vanished times!—Orange Leader.

what is Mexico doing to prevent the landing of these men and arms? Why depend upon the United States to arrest the progress of the revolutionists?

The trouble has assumed such dimensions that neutral powers can no longer consider it insurrection. It's a revolution and the "rebels" have as much right to fight for liberty and against oppression as the American people had to fight to throw off the English yoke.

Our Texas Legislature has made a grave error in drafting resolutions to the Mexican Government embodying the assurance that Texas has no sympathy for the revolutionists but the Senate has wisely held it up pending development. Should those people, now in a life and death struggle for liberty and for rights for the ballot succeed (which we believe they will) how would they feel toward Texas?

Our lawmakers lack judgment and also knowledge of Texas sentiment.—West Texas News.

Those "Good Old Times."

I'm sitting in my easy chair before the fireside's cheerful glare. All modern comforts are at hand; electric lights and music canned; the triumps that great men have wrought are gathering in my cozy cot. The neighbor children gather round, to hear me drivel and expound about the good old times gone by, which I applaud—I wonder why. I wonder why we are so prone to view the present with [illegible] and talk of vanished years as though they were the smoothest goods below. The children listen while I tell of times when everything was well, when girls were angels, minus crowns, and men were saints in hand-me-downs, and life was one long round of joy, without a sorrow to annoy. And in my heart I'm conscious that I'm simply talking through my hat. I'd hate like thunder to be swung back to the times when I was young. I'd hate to read by smoky lights and sleep on ticks of straw at nights, and go to bed [illegible] o'clock, because [illegible] get a drink, and find the cistern on the blink. We lived like horses in those days, and yet, much to my own amaze, I brag and brag in prose and rhymes, about the good old vanished times!—Orange Leader.
