The Guardian-Ivine was walking along a railroad track one day—the next day the coroner was holding an inquest. Petersen was testifying: "Ole and me walked along the track. I hear the whistle blow and get off the track. The train go by. I go on the track again and walk. Pretty soon I see Ole's leg. I walk further and then I see other leg. Pretty soon I see Ole's other leg. Then after a mile I see Ole's head, and then I say, "My God, something must have happened to Ole!"

She Was No Easy Mark.

Martha is seven, and has shown more than ordinary childish aversion to learning lessons, being washed, and having curls made smooth and shining, and less than the average delight in fairy tales. One day upon her return from Sunday-school she was questioned as to what she had learned from her nice teacher this time. She cried out with flashing eyes and an indignant toss of her pretty head, "Why, Mamma, my teacher told me today that story about the Children of Israel walking across the Red Sea and not getting themselves wet one single bit—and she es-pected me to believe it!"

Returning a Favor.

"It's going to be war to the knife" declared the suburban man, who was feeding his chickens.

"What now?" asked the friend.

"Why, Blinks sent me a box of axle-grease and advised me to use it on my lawn-mower."

"Well?"

"Well, I sent it back and told him to use it on his daughter's voice."

"Certainly, my husband, Mandy," the lady replied proudly.

"Alleluiah!" exclaimed the cook. "He suttinly am holdin' out well."

Stung.

An important looking and haughtily acting young man was wandering up and down on the platform of the railroad station of a small Western city. He was intent on finding an empty seat in the express, which was almost due to start. Vainly did he search each car. Suddenly he assumed an official air and, walking up to the last car, he cried out:

"All change here. This car will be left here."

The occupants of the crowded car uttered exclamations which proved their dissatisfaction, but hurried out and packed themselves in other coaches. The face of the young man assumed a bland and childlike expression as he settled himself very comfortably in an empty seat.

Shortly after the station agent put his head in at the door, and said:

"I suppose you're the smart boob who told the folks this car wasn't going, aren't you?"

"Yes," replied the bright youth, with a grin.

"Well," responded the station agent, "you were right. It isn't. The brakeman heard you calling out about it, and so he uncoupled it. He thought that you were an official.

I tried different remedies without help; but I am glad to say that Vinol cured my bronchial trouble which had lasted for three months. My breathing is all right and the soreness entirely gone from my chest."
