CAREFUL BITE ADJUSTMENT

Sometimes when you have had major work done on your gums and teeth to treat an advanced stage of gum disease, you may need careful bite adjustment to protect your teeth from further injury. They may be out of alignment, causing unusual stress when you bite or chew food. Some of your teeth may also have become more mobile or looser than they should be because of the gum disease damage.

In adjusting you bite, some of the excess stresses on your teeth may be reduced or eliminated by selectively grinding tooth surfaces that are too high or are otherwise interfering with a comfortable bite. Your dentist may also recommend permanent splinting by crowning some of your teeth to give them better stability. Other adjustments, including a gentle orthodontic rearrangement of teeth, may be needed for your comfort and protection.

Whatever damage gum disease may have caused, your best protection is prompt and regular treatment by your dentist.

Foot Facts

By Dr. Eric R. Tepper, Podiatrist

ITCHES AND SCRATCHES ON FEET

The types of red, itchy, flaky spots that would motivate immediate attention if found on the face or hands are sometimes allowed to rage on indefinitely on the feet. That is too bad, because prompt professional care can often put an end to the painful itching and scratching of such lesions. An accurate diagnosis is crucial. While many red or scaly patches on the foot may look alike to the untrained eye, there are a variety of causes and, therefore, treatments. For example, "peridigital dermatitis" usually involves scaling and skin breaks, often around the big toe, and it may be treated with steroid creams. "Erysipelas", on the other hand, is a streptococcal skin infection which usually requires antibiotics.

Most stubborn problems do respond to the attention of a professional. Home treatments may bring short-term, temporary relief, but medical answers are your best bet for the long-term. Here at the Eagle Lake Community Hospital, our aim is to prevent, not just repair. Don't wait for your foot itches and scratches, aches and pains to disappear like magic. Call us instead for prompt, personal attention at 234-5571. I am here the first and third Tuesdays of the month.

P.S. "Psoriasis" and "eczema" are two common skin problems that are often hereditary in origin.

Living Hope Church dedicates new building

On Sunday morning, May 22, Living Hope Church in Eagle Lake dedicated their new education building.

Pastors Joe and Mercy Fling presided over the dedication service marking the culmination of weeks of fund raising to purchase the building.

The congregation gathered outside the new building while deacons and elders of the church prayed and anointed the entrance.

The structure was dedicated to the work of the Lord in Eagle Lake. Then the congregation went throughout the building and grounds, praying for each aspect of the building, asking God's grace on the lives to be touched by its use.

The education building includes space for three classrooms, a kitchen, fellowship area and a garage which the church hopes to turn into a food pantry facility in the future.

Living Hope Church meets in the building formerly used by the Disciples of Christ and the Assembly of God, located at the corner of Church St. and North McCarty. It is over 100 years old. The historic structure was inadequate to the many needs of a growing church, being without classrooms or kitchen.

The new education building, formerly a residential property, is located east of the church sanctuary on Church St. Through the help of owner David Pavlicek and Bill Harrison with The First National Bank , the church was able to purchase the property.

Over the last few months, several projects have contributed to funds for purchase of the building. They sold McCain Hot Sauce, held a bake sale in front of Wilcox Minimax before Easter and held garage sales at the homes of Trine Alvarado and Frances Geib in March. In addition, the children led the church in collecting over $600 in coins during the three month period.

What to Do About Medicine Side Effects

According to a recent review of two publications in the journal American Pharmacy, the most common side effects of prescription medicines purchased in 1992 in the United States included skin rash, nausea and vomiting, diarrhea, dizziness, headache, and stomach pain or cramps. Studies have shown that side effects occur most frequently with pain relievers, antacids, arthritis medicines, antibiotics, blood thinners, and blood pressure medicines. The companies that distribute medicines are required to list side effects in the literature they enclose with their medicines.

In addition to this information, pharmacists have access to reference books and computerized information systems that keep them up-to-date about side effects. Some computer systems allow the pharmacist to print information that is written for the patient or consumer. One of the most important ways to prevent side effects is to read this and other material. This helps one anticipate the possibility of a reaction.

It is important to know what to do in case a reaction does occur while you are taking a medicine. For example, you should know whether or not to discontinue the medicine. Relieving side effects may involve stopping the medicine or taking a different medicine. After reading about side effects, discuss them with your pharmacist and your physician.
