Its nose and eyes are pink resembling very much in color those of a white rabbit. Ben J. Brothers, at one time interested in cattle in the lower country, but now a resident of Quanah, where he is dealing extensively in real estate, came in last Thursday for a few days' stay. He had been to his old home at Gonzales, and came over here to meet old friends and also interest different parties in his realty propositions in Northwest Texas. Last spring Mr. Brothers retired from the cattle business and for three months traveled steadily looking for a suitable location. He went into old Mexico, down into the Rio Grande country, around about Corpus Christi, through East Texas and into the Panhandle as far as the New Mexican line. Finally he landed in Quanah, which is in Hardeman county, adjoining the Oklahoma border, and right there he remained. Ben owns interests in several big ranching properties and is engaged in a general colonizing business. He is also interested with Otto von Rosenberg in lands in Ford county. Talking of that section he says that it is developing faster than any other section of Texas, and that lands today that command $15 per acre will sell for $50 within the near future. Splendid crops of cotton, corn, wheat, etc. are made and a full failure is never known, nor is the boll weevil or corn weevil in that country yet. Ben is an entertaining talker and with his aggressiveness and honesty of purpose is making money out there—and no man deserves it more. Hallettsville Herald.
