Messrs. W. V. Boyd and H.
W. Lott experienced a narrow escape from death Tuesday afternoon. They were down in a rice irrigating well, on their rice farm about two miles east of town, when they were overcome by gas. Mr. Boyd, Mr. Lott and a negro had gone down into the pit, which is 28 feet deep, to fix some machinery. The negro, feeling the effect of the gas, climbed out of the pit and reaching the top called to Messrs Lott and Boyd to come out, but seeing they were not able to move, he quickly summoned the neighbors, who came with a rope and both Mr. Boyd and Mr. Lott were pulled up from the pit in a state of unconsciousness. Dr.
Fitzgerald was summoned and in a short while brought both around all right, though they were a little "groggy" for a day or more. Gasoline leaking from a number of tanks just outside of the pump house, seeped through the sand and formed a gas in the pit. Both gentlemen had a narrow escape to say the least of it.
