Free Material Tariff.

(Geo. H. Little of Columbus to Sunday's Houston Chronicle)

I say some time back in the papers, that my friend, Hon. George Burgess, from this district, in congress made a flowing speech against free raw material. Now this I can not exactly understand, coming from a Texas-raised Democrat, and with your privilege would like to ask my friend Burgess a few questions. Do the consumers of the United States need foreign materials? If so, why make them pay a duty on raw or manufactured? If it is not needed, why let it come to this country? If the factories import raw material and pay the duty, do they not add this to the price of their manufactured goods and get it back out of the consumers? And why do we not let the raw materials come to the factories?

Did they not elect you to work for their interests? Now, if the factories import raw material, does this not give the poor operatives more employment? Then why object to this?

Goods made in this country give that much more work for tailors, and from my view it seems to me that free raw material is what we need and is more democratic. It has been protection that has built up the graft that is now causing so much trouble. Why make class legislation? Are you raising the price of wool or cotton for the producer? Have you ever known of factories in our country raising the prices of raw material over the prices of foreign markets? Do not the foreign markets and gamblers control the prices in this country?

The South has helped to pay the Northern pensions, built up their factories with protection and kept up the financial center in New York to support the gamblers. Now turn your attention to Texas. Make Houston our financial center for the West and Galveston and Houston the shipping points. Now, if you want my views, I would take off the duty from all necessities of life, help the consumers; would tax lands, public buildings for profit, corporations, etc., all except private residence properties, etc.

I am very sorry to see my friend George take the stand that he does. He has left a gap open for an opponent. I can not support a protectionist. George H. Little, in Houston Chronicle.

About Colorado County.

The following concerning Colorado county is taken from the Galveston News' Texas Almanac, recently issued by that paper:

Situated in the coastal plains, two counties removed from the Gulf of Mexico; one of the original counties, created in 1836 and organized in 1837; named for the Colorado river, area 243 square miles; population 18,897 in 1910 and 22,293 in 1900. Columbus, the county seat, is an unincorporated town. Eagle Lake, the chief city, had a population of 1,717 in 1910 and 1,107 in 1900. Weimar, Rock Island, Alleyton, Oakland, Matthews, Eldridge, Mentz and Bernardo are other towns. The county is served by the San Antonio and Aransas Pass; Gulf, Colorado and Santa Fe, and Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroads.

The surface of the county is mostly level prairie with a few small hills along streams. It is well timbered with hardwood and has some pine.

The Colorado River bisects the county from north to south, and its stream, with its tributaries, furnishes excellent drainage and sufficient water for all purposes. Artesian water has been developed at a depth of from 800 to 1,000 feet; surface water of good quality is found at shallower depths. A deep black sandy loam predominates in the river bottoms. There is some light sandy soil, but as a rule the soil varies from a sandy loam to black waxy and alluvial. The rainfall approximates 35 to 40 inches per annum. The live stock industry, formerly the chief occupation of the people and still important, has been driven into the background by diversified farming. Rice, sugar cane, cotton, corn, potatoes and all kinds of vegetables are produced in large quantities. A large acreage of sugar cane is consumed by the mills at Eagle Lake. Some Colorado County cane is shipped to Mills and Wharton Counties. Cotton is an important crop, but the tendency of the average farmer is toward a great deal of truck. All farmers are engaged in producing poultry, which yields a large annual revenue. Brick clay is found in various parts of the county, but the deposits are undeveloped. Homeowners will find an excellent opportunity of securing good farm lands in Colorado County. A large acreage is available. Improved farm lands are quoted from $30 to $50 per acre, and some lands are sold at higher prices. Unimproved lands are quoted at from $10 to $40 per acre. One of the natural resources of the county is found in its excellent water power along the Colorado River. This water power thus far has not been developed, although several schemes looking toward the construction of dams and canals have been advanced and considered.

Minneapolis Man Purchases Stock from Local Firm.
