Different Kinds of Smiles.

"There are many kinds of smiles, each having a distinct character. Some announce goodness and sweetness, others betray sarcasm, bitterness and pride; some soften the countenance by languishing tenderness, others brighten by their spiritual vivacity."—Lavater.

It may be because of the uncertainty about smiles and their meaning that at European court affairs etiquette demands that they shall be banished. If you were inclined to doubt you should go to some function and see for yourself. Even the most formal of the hands of a stone-like countenance, for woe betide the man or woman that lets the faintest quiver upset the lips. This is an unwritten law of court etiquette and many a man has lost position and honor by grinning when he should have frowned. One of the most promising men in the Russian empire, Baron Enidoff, who climbed up until he had reached the office of confidential advisor to the Czar, had his hopes of political and social supremacy rudely shattered because he smiled faintly at some little mishap that came to the Czar. We might even call that one a sixty thousand dollar smile, because his salary was that, or its equivalent, and he lost his position the very next day.

I read of an account a short time ago which spoke of an exceptionally bright Scotch political light named Milbanke, who committed political suicide by laughing at a ridiculous remark made to him by the Kaiser. The latter very coldly dismissed him and the Scotchman lost his position just as he was about to have it changed for a far more desirable one as a member of a legation to guard German interests in China.—Holland's Magazine.

Is Pity Wholly a Good Thing.

Perhaps the most marked trait of human nature in modern times, and that which distinguishes it most from human nature in ancient times, is pity.

It was the main contents of the Christian religion for over a thousand years.

Almost all medieval religion can be summed up in that one word, pity. The good works most emphasized consisted in giving alms to the poor. The walls of the old churches are covered with languishing saints. The sufferings of the martyrs were wrought into works of art in every corner of the temple.

We are the heirs of centuries of this kind of training. Sensitiveness to pain has become our chief moral force.

The history of civilization is the story of a long conflict with pain. We house the sick in hospitals and provide asylums for the unfortunate. Mankind's most boasted medical achievement is the discovery of anesthetics.

We have societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Our modern theology has abolished the fires of the next world.

We have even produced a sect that denies that there is any suffering in this world; like the Albany legislator who, disgusted with the crime of bigamy, determined to put a stop to it and introduced a bill: "Be it resolved, That the crime of bigamy be hereby abolished." Happy thought!

But I would like to put one little interrogation point: Is pain after all a bad thing? And is pity wholly a good thing?

Animal Companions.

The child deprived of pets misses much. To love a dog, a cat, a bird or any live thing has a humanizing influence on the character. The care of a pet teaches a child something. The love of the pet brings out the tender feeling of his heart, makes a child less inclined to cruelty, more thoughtful, of quicker sympathy. A pet gives him something to enjoy at home and so makes home life richer. It is one means of keeping him from undesirable companions. It helps to form habits of industry. In providing food and shelter for a living creature he is learning responsibility. While teaching a dog how to perform a trick, the child is enlarging his own intelligence and his patience. If he is learning to ride a horse, he is gaining in courage and in self-reliance. A wide field of interest is opened to the child with a pet. In learning about one animal he learns about many. His love of his pet fills his mind with useful and good thoughts and there is less room for the idle or vicious. He should have this happiness if it can be given him.—Milwaukee Journal.
