COW PEAS at the Farmers Supply Co.

Miss Mary Williamson returned Sunday from a visit to Houston.

Miss Alvaret Middleton left last Saturday for a several week's visit to her old home in Champaign, Illinois.

A sprained ankle may as a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's Liniment and observing the directions with each bottle. For sale by all dealers.—Adv.

Phoning the Headlight when you have visitors is just a little courtesy you owe your guests—that's all.

WANTED—To buy a medium sized safe, and second hand roller top desk; must be cheap for cash. E. L. Water & Light Co.

The Water's Price

It was a banquet where a notable gathering of politicians had assembled. A certain aspiring young attorney was among the number, and as he spied an influential judge at the far end of the parlor, he called the head-waiter, slipped half a dollar into his hand, and whispered, "Put me next to Judge Spink at the table."

Upon being seated, however, he found he was at the other end of the room from the judge.

He called the head-waiter to explain.

"Well, sir," replied the official, "the fact is that the judge gave a dollar to put you as far from him as possible."—Lippincott's.

The building made vacant by Mr. A. L. Baring's removal this week, is being fitted up for an up-to-date grocery store and will be ready for occupancy by Willie Meyer, who expect to be open for business next week.

Two negroes were comfortably sprawled beneath a shady oak, enjoying to the full the pastime of wishing for the impossible. Said one:

"I wish I had a million watermelons."

"Wouldn't dat be fine?" exclaimed the second negro. "Den we could eat all de watermelons we wanted."

"We!" mocked the first negro in disgust. "Why, I wouldn't give yo' a smell!"

"Wouldn't yo' even give me one if I watermelon?"

"Wouldn't I even give yo' one if I watermelon?"—with rising indignation—"Why, yo' good fo' nothin' lazy man, hain't yo' got nough ambition to wish fo' yo' own watermelons?"—Every body's Magazine.

The question of loyalty to home institutions is an old one, but it is one that cannot be overworked or discussed too much. The more interesting it grows; the more the light is turned on it the greater it becomes. We know that we have seen some of the evils of the policy of buying out of town that which could have been bought at home, but we have not seen all, for new evils spring up every week. Much has been said of the injury to local merchants, local mechanics and local institutions of every kind, but the injury is also great to the owners of all business and residence property. Reduce the local sales and you reduce the value of business property of every kind; reduce the volume of trade, and work and you cut down the value of every home in town. We may not see the local merchant, or the local mechanic, but even if we grant this, we should at least worry over the losses to ourselves. We do not know whether the amount sent away from home is increasing or decreasing. If it is increasing we are slowly but surely approaching commercial suicide; if it is decreasing a brighter day is dawning.—Honey Grove Signal.

Not a sound could be heard in the courtroom. The prisoner had just been condemned to death.

"You have a legal right to express a last wish," said the Judge, "and, if it is possible, it will be granted."

The prisoner, who was a barber, gave the Judge an appealing look as he replied:

"I should like just once more to be allowed to shave the District Attorney."—Lippincott's.

The Progressive Read.

The progressive man reads and knows all that affects his business. What is new is to him important. He does not wait until next year to learn what is being done by his competitors. His chief means of information is the printed page.

The progressive lawyer reads the latest reports and keeps posted as to all the changes made in the laws, in the jurisdiction within which he practices. He has a large and costly library and each week finds such additions as are needed to enable him to keep abreast with the times. When an important decision is rendered he sometimes telegraphs for a copy, because he is unwilling to wait for its publication in the usual manner. He must keep up with the times.

The progressive doctor reads the latest reports in his profession, knows what is being done by the most advanced in his profession, owns a large and costly library, and keeps a case of instruments and apparatus which within itself costs a fortune. He knows that he must keep up with the times. He dare not lag behind others in the knowledge of his profession.

And this is true with the other professions. There is effort to keep up with the times and to know what is going on in the world. In the language of President Wilson, "Nothing is now done in the way it was done twenty years ago." There are changes and changes, and one who does not keep up must suffer the consequences.

It is unfortunately true that farmers read less, and some of them use less effort to keep abreast with the times than others. But this changing, better roads, better schools, better conditions, and more than all else, the efforts of the business world in behalf of farming, is bringing changes. The knowledge of farming is not the superficial knowledge of the old days. Agriculture is a great science, and it has now a literature all its own. The farmer of today is accessible, and he has now the means of reaching others. In the printed page he finds knowledge, and through the printed page, and others find him. The change is for the better, and it is well to recognize it.—Farm and Ranch.

She Knew

Mr. Boaster had his portrait painted. It cost him a goodly sum and he was proud of it. When he came home he showed it to his cook.

"Well, Mary," he said, "how do you like this portrait?"

"Sure, sir," said the cook, "it's lovely. It's beautiful. It's divine."

"And of course," said Boaster, "you know who it is?"

"Oh, of course I do, sir," replied the cook. "Of course, of course." As she spoke she kept drawing nearer to the picture studying it more and more closely.

"Of course, sir, it's you or the mistress."

In 1862 an intimate friend of President Lincoln visited him in Washington, finding him rather depressed in spirit as the result of the reverses then repeatedly suffered by the federal troops.

"This being president isn't all it is supposed to be, is it, Mr. Lincoln?" said his visitor. "No," Lincoln replied, his eye twinkling for moment. "I feel sometimes like the Irishman who, after being ridden on a rail, said: 'If it wasn't for the honor of the thing, I'd rather walk.'"

About Our Service

We would like to have our delivery service as good as our PURE CRYSTAL ICE but that, we are afraid, is impossible. Occasionally, mistakes are bound to happen with a force as capable as ours, but we are trying to reduce our mistakes to the minimum. You can help us if you will.

Whenever anything goes wrong when you are not served as well as you think you should be, will you please tell us about it? This will enable us to avoid such errors in the future and will help us to serve you! We receive many compliments—but complaints would do us more good.
