One Way Of Doing It
The art of doing things even in road building is not so difficult when the right way is found. The 8000 business man who assembled in Northeastern Michigan recently built in a single day a gravelled road 25 miles long between Bay City and Mackinaw. Four thousand teams and 750 automobiles shared in the work and 2500 women helped in serving refreshments. Between daylight and dark a miserable old road, and all who took part in the meeting shared in some form of manual labor. While everybody acknowledges the force of the arguments for good roads, the usual disposition is to let somebody else do the work and pay the cost. The Michigan event was considered highly enjoyable by the army of road volunteers and the results were surprisingly extensive. Everyone who engaged in the enterprise labored vigorously and there were none to say that the 8000 had a good time while the community secured for itself an advantage of great value.
