"THE HOUSE OF BARGAINS"

Another Great Forward Step.

Twenty-five Governors of States of the American Union have given their unqualified endorsement to the idea of extending the labor of convicts beyond the walls of prisons and in the open. Kentucky has just fallen in line as the latest of six States to employ convict labor on the construction of good roads. The State of New York will probably put part of its convicts to making brick for road paving and part of them to road building. Some of the States are bound up in contracts for prison labor; others are held from abandoning the confinement system purely by traditional belief in the necessity of imprisonment; but the greater number are inclining toward the more enlightened and humane methods of dealing with their convicts.

The contract system has long been doomed. On all sides think barbaric. Perhaps it is of greater importance, from a practical point of view, than it has been with equal emphasis pronounced uneconomic. It has led almost everywhere to the "sweating" of the unfortunate inmates of penal institutions; it has in many instances led, like the unspeakable "convict camp," to the creation of penance. Hardly less inhuman, however, has been the other extreme of treatment, that of enforced idleness, solitariness, silence.

There is no morbid sentimentality in the demand, now becoming common among civilized people, that the law shall be corrective rather than punitive, that the culprit shall be uplifted rather than debased. It is simply an expression of the higher rationalism, an outcome of the Christianization of the age. And, furthermore, as we have already indicated, it appeals not only to the conscience but to the practical sense of humanity. It demands that the convict shall be not only made to work but privileged to labor; that he shall toil not only for his own salvation but for the good of the public. It insists that he shall be taken out of the gloom of the cell, removed from the depressing and degrading influences of prison environments and given an opportunity to share, with whatever tasks may be imposed upon him, the freedom of the open and the blessing of the sunshine. Honest, Energy and Ambition Depend on Physical Condition

An eminent German scientist has said, "Honesty is a state of mind dependent on the physical condition." Everyone knows that energy and ambition depend on how one feels. The liver plays an important part in one's feelings. If it is performing its natural function we feel energetic and ambitious. When it is not working right, we feel depressed and lazy. Headache, indigestion, constipation and backache are the signs.

Calomel used to do, but it proved so dangerous that medical science had to find an other course.

Back to the Soil.

The cry: "Back to the land" is gathering momentum as it rolls along. It is a sane idea and will gather many recruits on its tour around the world.

When once we breathe the pure fresh air of country living the memory of it lingers with us through life, it matters not where fate may carry us.

The memory of the freedom we enjoyed on the farm in our earlier days renews within us a desire to return to it and enjoy the blessed rest it brings to the overworked body and brain. This desire for rest never suggests a return to the bustle of the city of the factory but to the quiet of the country---to the farm.

For example, Miss Leona Jackson, the world renowned violinist who has traveled over more country than any present day woman, has abandoned her profession for the quiet of farm life. Settling on a farm near Albany, New York, she is enjoying nature and Nature's God. In an interview regarding her retirement she said:

"I have given so much of my life to the public that I think I deserve to have a little private life of my own if I want it, and I do. I am just living here on the farm quietly, and I have no intention of leaving it---that is, not now. I like the things other girls like, and I went into public life so young that I had no chance to have a good time like other girls, I always wanted to live in the country, so here I am."---Houston Post.

Woman's Love and Man's

"There's just two things that breaks up most happy homes," observed a philosopher.

"What's them?" inquired a listener.

"Woman's love for dry goods and a man's love for wet goods."---Hershey's Weekly.

A Woman's Wants.

Man wants but little here below, does not apply to woman; her wants are great, diversified, and keeps us always scheming. In winter its cloaks and wraps, and furs from mink and cat; we scarcely get the bills all paid before its an Easter hat. The Easter bills aren't more than paid before its summer dress. In the very time they need less clothes their wants become more pressing. Without these flimsy false-rols they act like they'd be lost, the less there is to summer things, it seems, the more they cost. They buy a waist that's full of holes, and minus sleeves and collars; you can wad it up inside one hand, but it costs you thirteen dollars. And thus it goes the whole year round in grief or pain or mirth; man may not want so many things, but women want the earth.---Exchange.

What the Preacher Did.

A little town boasts of a church whose pastor, besides being an eloquent preacher, is a man of stalwart proportions. At one of his evening prayer meetings the services were disturbed by two young men who audibly scoffed at everything they saw or heard. Finally the pastor remonstrated with them on their behavior and asked them why they had attended the meeting.
"We came to see miracles performed," imprudently replied one of the rascals.
Leaving the pulpit and walking quietly down the aisle, the minister seized one after the other by the collar, and as they disappeared out of the door with an imprint of his boot, remarked, "We don't perform miracles here but we do cast out devils."
