TWO ALDERMEN TO BE ELECTED TOMORROW

No Candidates Announced But Friends Urge Middleton and McCreary to Submit Names to Voters.

Two aldermen are to be elected at a special city election here tomorrow to succeed Alderman A. J. Wirtz and Wm. T. Chester. No one has announced his candidacy to fill these offices, and the office of alderman is a very important one to the city. A number of friends of Messrs. E. Middleton and A. R. McCreary have suggested their names as candidates for the offices. While neither of the gentlemen mentioned above will consent to make a fight against opposition for the office, we are reliably informed that both, at the request of friends, will accept the office should they be elected. While no one has offered for the office, it is likely that the two names mentioned above will be voted on tomorrow. Both are good citizens, and safe, conservative business men, and business men on the board of aldermen are essential to a good business administration of the city's affairs.

She never makes the faults of her friends a subject of conversation, is slow to criticize, and can always find something kind to say about every one.

She accepts favors gratefully and returns them gladly. "She does not shift her responsibilities to others, but cheerfully lends a hand to lighten her neighbor's load."

"She strives to keep on the sunny side, but is ever ready with helpful sympathy for those who walk in the shade."

"She is loyal to her friends, tender and devoted to those who love, and generous to all."

"She is liked by both men and women, and loved by children, and she finds the world a good place to live in."

All these points, it may be noticed, belong really to a girl's inner life; they can hardly be added from the outside. Outward popularity depends somewhat on circumstances; but true and permanent popularity must always depend upon character. A great number of girls forget this, and are only admired while they are young and pretty, by those who know little about them. The girl who is lovely in character wins popularity, year in and year out.

The Popular Girl.

Who is the popular girl, the land over? Not always the pretty girl, not always the clever girl, though each has a first-rate chance at popularity. The Farm Journal has lately made an analysis of why a girl is liked by others with a liking that is permanent, and its points are worthy any girl's consideration. "She can smile when things go wrong, and does not consider every little disappointment a calamity."

"She shares her pleasures and keeps her troubles to herself."

"She never makes the faults of her friends a subject of conversation, is slow to criticize, and can always find something kind to say about every one."

"She accepts favors gratefully and returns them gladly."

"She does not shift her responsibilities to others, but cheerfully lends a hand to lighten her neighbor's load."

"She strives to keep on the sunny side, but is ever ready with helpful sympathy for those who walk in the shade."

"She is loyal to her friends, tender and devoted to those who love, and generous to all."

"She is liked by both men and women, and loved by children, and she finds the world a good place to live in."

All these points, it may be noticed, belong really to a girl's inner life; they can hardly be added from the outside. Outward popularity depends somewhat on circumstances; but true and permanent popularity must always depend upon character. A great number of girls forget this, and are only admired while they are young and pretty, by those who know little about them. The girl who is lovely in character wins popularity, year in and year out.
