"Where Your Dollar Does Double Duty."

Faithful Unto Death.

"One of the bravest acts I witnessed during the whole war," said an officer of the Army of Northern Virginia, was that of a young soldier, who was probably not over sixteen. We had thought of him only as a boy, although he went with the regiment on all of its marches, and lived with it in all its encampments.

"One day there was a fierce engagement. In the midst of it a bullet struck this boy in the breast, and he fell. Our colonel ordered his men to dismount, and as he, himself sprang from his horse, the boy called out in a weak voice, 'I will hold your horse, colonel!'"

"Stopping in the midst of the storm of bullets to gaze in pity on the white, boyish face, the colonel said, 'But you can't do that, lad—you are dying." "I know I am, colonel," the gallant boy replied. "But I can hold the reins when I am dead." The colonel placed the bridle in the trembling hands and went forward. When the fight was over, he hurried back, and found the boy lying dead, the bridle reins still wrapped tightly round his limp right hand."

The Dollar.

There is no sentiment about a dollar. It costs no more than the filthy pocket of a beggar as it does in the sunny pouch of the millionaire.

It is a bitter pill that covers a multitude of sins. It brings joy today, it is the cause of sorrow tomorrow. It never speaks, yet it talks. It circulates freely, yet it keeps in hiding. It is the ruin of millions; it lifts millions out of the depths of despair. It leaves many disappointments. We tremble at its strength, yet we crush it with one hand. It is always the same, yet it is ever changing. The lack of it promotes industry. The excess of it causes idleness. It creates trouble, and it brings peace. It makes one restless, and it makes one restful. It lubricates the axle that the world revolves upon. Withal, it is a silent friend. Without it we perish. The world lets him severely alone who has not a dollar he can call his own. Treat it right and it will reciprocate.—The Shield.

Here's Another Good One.

An exceedingly deaf man was being introduced to a young woman. The latter was pretty, but she had a strange name. Her name was Dinglefugle.

"Mr. Smith," said a mutual acquaintance, "this is Miss Dinglefugle."

The deaf man cupped his hand behind his head.

"Please pardon me," he said, "but I'm hard of hearing. What did you say the name was?"

"Miss Dinglefugle."

"I'm awfully sorry," murmured the afflicted one with a strained and puzzled look in his eye, "but I haven't caught it yet."

"The other man raised his voice to a shout.

"Miss Dinglefugle!" he blared.

Resignedly, hopelessly, the deaf man shook his head.

"It's no use," he said; "sounds like Dinglefugle to me."

A New Ford Story.

Here is new Ford story we saw somewhere, but have forgotten just where. A man in California writes to the Ford company and tells them they should feel very much exalted for the reason that the Ford is the only car mentioned in the Bible; and to prove it cites them to a passage in Isaiah, which says: "He went up into Heaven on high" and asks what other car but a Ford could do that?—Exchange.

This is to inform the public that the firm name of Brown & Schleicher, doing a wholesale and brokerage and commission business, in the city of Eagle Lake, Texas, has been changed and in the future will be known as the S. M. Schleicher Company. S. M. SCHLEICHER.

Too Particular.

Howard Elliott, the head of the New Haven lines, was talking in New York about railroad punctuality.

"Our trains are far more punctual than they used to be," he said. "Did you hear about the Western train that tied up all night on account of a storm?"

"A drummer on this train—this happened years ago—said pleasantly to the conductor:

"We're going to be late, friend?"

"No, said the conductor in surly tones; 'no, we ain't going to be late, neither.'

"But," said the drummer, "I thought we were going to tie up here for the night?"

"So we are," the conductor sneered. "So we are, but that isn't going to make us late. We don't run so close to time as all that."—Washington Star.

Stomach Trouble Cured.

Revenge.

A contributor to Pearson's Weekly tells us that after Jimmie's tooth was drawn, he rose from the chair, held out his little hand and said:

"Give it to me, please."

With an accommodating smile, the dentist wrapped the tooth in a paper and extended it to Jimmie.

"What are you going to do with it?" he asked.

"I am going to take it home," was the reply, "and cram sugar into it, and watch it ache."—Ex.

"Where," said the land agent, addressing an audience of possible purchasers, "where else on the face of the globe will you find in one place copper, tin, iron, cotton, hemp, grain, game?"

Things You Never Hear.

"No, madam, these eggs are not very fresh."

"You're sure $10.00 will be enough, old man?"

"What an ugly baby. Aren't you ashamed to own such a little satyr?"

Had a System.

"I am writing my husband for money."

"And does he always send it when you write?"

"Not always the first time, but I have a series of follow up forms that never fail."

Parcel Post Vacation.

"What is in the mail from daughter?" asked mother.

"A thousand kisses," answered father, and 16 handkerchiefs, two waists and four batches of ribbons for you to wash and mend."

Humor of the Hour.

"How would you classify a telephone girl? Is hers a business or a profession?"

"Neither. It is a calling."—Christian Register.

More Than He Needed.

"At the end of five hours and a half if you are in town," said the judge, "you will be arrested on the same charge."

"You may have five full hours of that time back," said the law-breaker. "I can get along with the thirty minutes."

"I must put on my thinking cap and try to decide this matter," remarked Mrs. Wombat.

"I've heard of those thinking caps," said Mrs. Wallaby. "I must get one of them. Where did you get yours and how much was it trimmed?"—Judge.
