Sports. Last Friday the Eagle Lake basketball team played the Schulenburg team here. The Eagles beat them by a score of 36 to 29. The two teams had played before and Schulenburg had beaten; for that reason the Eagle were out to win and did. Captain Kallina played a fine game as did the rest of the team.

THE ARCHIVES OF BEXAR Where Business of the Texas Government, From 1727 To 1835, Was Centered in San Antonio.

(Note: The following is the first of a series of weekly articles taken from the Bexar Archives at the University of Texas. This collection, considered the greatest single historical treasure on the North American continent, has been discovered and is now being translated by the University of Texas. It consists of 400,000 pages of original Spanish handwritten documents comprising the official archives of the Mexican government for the Department of Bexar, which now the State of Texas, for the period from 1731, soon after Texas became a separate province of Mexico, to 1836, to the Battle of San Jacinto. The documents will consist principally of questions from the documents, many of which have heretofore been unpublished, and will reveal for the first time the official history of the century in which Texas was transformed from a wilderness inhabited only by savage Indian tribes to an independent American republic. Generations ago it was predicted that the translation of the documents in the Bexar Archives might necessitate the re-writing of many portions of Texas history. For years it was the dream of historians that these valuable records should be transcribed and translated. That vision is at last on the way to being realized.

When Texas won its independence and an Anglo-American seat of government was set up within the new republic, the Mexican capital at San Antonio was abandoned. During the century that Mexico governed, the capital of Texas as a republic was never located in San Antonio, and consequently the official archives of Bexar did not become a part of the archives of the Republic but fell into the possession of Bexar County. Fast-sighted historians realized the importance of having these records translated, but lack of funds the Red River. Spain's first attempt at occupation which was occasioned by the landing of the French in the Gulf of Mexico, at Matagorda Bay, proved a complete failure, and in a few years Texas was again an unpopulated wilderness. When Louisiana fell under the control of a commercial company that was more interested in acquiring a contraband trade with Mexico than in settling the territory, the French soon became hostile again, and from this time to 1763 the theme of greatest interest in Texas history is the attempt of the French to drive out the Spanish, and, on the other hand, the preserving endeavors of the Spanish to hold the country by civilizing and Christianizing the native tribes. Such was the political and humanitarian use made of the mission.

In 1763 an agreement was reached between the officials of Bexar County and the University of Texas, whereby these rare documents, in their entirety, were to be deposited in the University library. The materials were to be arranged in chronological order, and translations were to be made. Copies of the records as translated, were to be furnished to the commissioners' court of Bexar County. After removal of its priceless archives to the University library, there was still lack of financial support. Mrs. Mattie Austin Hatcher, University archivist, among a multitude of other duties, had charge of the Bexar collection. Handicapped by the lack of even a filing clerk, she worked alone. Each day she managed to retrieve a few minutes of her life to spend on the Bexar Archives. Without assistants, she has asserted the hundreds of thousands of documents, has catalogued them chronologically and according to subject matter. That calendar, or index, is now complete, and the archives are in order for systematic translation.

It was in the spring of 1934, just as Mrs. Hatcher was in the last stages of making the extended fortune came the way of University historians. Federal funds were allotted to the University for student relief work, and a corps of University students were set to work checking and re-checking each document and making copies of each index card. The University Board of Regents organized a committee to translate the Bexar Archives, Juan Haggard-Villanova, a graduate of the University and a Spanish scholar. In former years, translations have been made of certain documents as unusual, important, but the first orderly translation of the whole collection is now under way. The period from 1803 to 1821 was recognized as the most significant one in the history of early Texas, and the documents covering this era are the ones that will be translated. It was in 1803 that the sale of Louisiana made Texas a frontier province, and a bone of contention between the United States and Spain. It was in 1821 that Mexico's independence was established, opening the way for American immigration to Texas.

When the Bexar Archives came into the possession of the University in 1898, Lester Q. Bugbee, then instructor in history at the University and later adjunct professor, prepared a brief description of this collection which was published in the San Antonio Express, September 19, 1901. It was later reprinted in pamphlet form, a copy of which is in the rare book section of the University's Texas Collection. His article points out the international significance of Texas' strategic position.

"The Spanish occupation of Texas is inseparably connected with the French occupation of Louisiana." —The founding of the missions around Nacogoches and San Antonio is but a chapter in the history of the conflict between France and Spain for the possession of the country west of the Mississippi River. The French soon became hostile again, and from this time to 1763 the theme of greatest interest in Texas history is the attempt of the French to drive out the Spanish, and, on the other hand, the preserving endeavors of the Spanish to hold the country by civilizing and Christianizing the native tribes. Such was the political and humanitarian use made of the mission.
