WCJC, Public Schools To Aid Non-Graduates

Wharton County Junior College in Wharton and eleven public school systems within the WCJC service area have joined forces to come to the educational and financial aid of those who never graduated from high school.

"This is one of the most progressive and exciting things to happen in public education for many years," states Dr. John Brooks, director of the federal state-funded Adult Basic Education Co-op in Wharton, Matagorda and Colorado Counties.

The night classes are structured so that anyone may learn at his own pace. The learning level provided the student in seven or eight years of high school during the past year.

Classes are free and include textbooks, paper, and pencils. The only charge is $7.50 for taking the G.E.D. high school equivalency test. This is payable when the student receives his diploma.

Some enroll just to learn how to read or write while others pick up their education endeavors from the point they dropped out of elementary school.

English speaking to adults with deficiencies in such areas as mathematics, ABE classes in Eagle Lake are directed by C. V. DeShazo meeting Mondays and Wednesdays from 6:30-8:30 in the Eagle Lake Middle School. Information may be obtained by telephoning 335-3531 or writing DeShazo at Rice Consolidated Independent School District, Drawer 335, in Altair.
