It was at Independence Hall in Philadelphia that the Second Continental Congress convened. During the session of Congress in 1775, George Washington was elected Commander in Chief of the Continental Army. Also during that session on July 4, 1776, the representatives from the thirteen colonies drafted and approved the Declaration of Independence. The document was read to the public on July 8, ±776, and the Liberty Bell rang the news to the entire city. The Declaration of Independence was formally signed on August 2, 1776.
