

Texas Farm Acreage Expected to Decrease

AUSTIN—Farm acreage in Texas is expected to shrink by some 400,000 acres in 1977, breaking a four-year trend toward stability. Agriculture Commissioner John C. White has reported. "For the past few years, the total number of farms has been decreasing at a fairly steady rate but the actual amount of farm land remained stable at 141,800,000 acres from 1973 until last year," White explained.

"However, the newest estimate for 1977 is down to 141,400,000 acres," he added. The total number of farms is also expected to continue its downward slide, from 205,000 farms in 1976 to 202,000 in 1977, according to the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service. "The loss of farms, when coupled with a dip in acreage, carries much more impact. Before, the diminished number of total farms only meant that small, marginal operations were being absorbed by other farms who were increasing their acreage," White said. "Now, however, we are not only anticipating that 3,000 farms will be going out of business, but they will also be taken out of production and will either be sold for residential or commercial development or will be fallow," he stated.

GOING, GOING... Total farm acreage in Texas for 1977, at 141,400,000 acres, is projected to be down for the first time in four years by 400,000 acres. Rising production costs and unfair land tax structures are among the factors forcing farmers out of business in the state, according to Agriculture Commissioner John C. White.

138 Species Observed In Refuge's Christmas Bird Count

John Kirk, Biological Technician at the Altwater Prairie Chickens National Wildlife Refuge, shown above, was one of 15 birders who recently participated in the Christmas Bird Count which was conducted on and around the Altwater Prairie Chickens Refuge. A total of 138 species and approximately 106,759 individuals were counted by the observers who traveled 345 miles by car and 18 miles on foot. Some of the outstanding birds observed included one tropical kingbird and two red-eyed vireos, and two Wilson's warblers. Kirk said the biggest disappointment was the absence of any observed prairie chickens. This year's count recorded 70 species more than last year's.
