Local Families Are Smaller

Are Colorado County families getting larger or smaller in size? How big is the average local family compared with those in other parts of the country?

The question of family size has come to the fore lately because of government figures that show marked changes, nationally, in family composition.

Biologists and ecologists have been concerned for some years about the rapid growth in population and the resultant rate at which the country has been using up its natural resources and contaminating the environment.

More recently, there has been a change in the population picture, due to a sharp drop in the birth rate.

For the first time in history, the number of births in the United States has dropped to a level that represents zero population growth.

About 2.1 children per family are required just for population maintenance, according to the Census Bureau. It has been around that point for some time, in fact, and has been for years.

The latest report, however, shows a rate of only 1.8.

In Colorado County, on the basis of the latest figures, households are somewhat smaller than in most communities, reflecting the birth rate prevailing in recent years. The average, locally, is 2.86 persons per 100 households.

In other parts of the United States, by way of comparison, the average is 2.96 per 100 households. Throughout the West South Central States, it is 2.99.

The figures show that families in the local area are smaller than they were some years ago. In 1960 there were 325 persons in every 100 households, as against the 286 per 100 today.

Although the nation's fertility rate is below the replacement level of 2.1 children per family at the present time, the real end of natural population growth cannot be expected until that rate has been maintained for a long time, because of the number of girls who are approaching child-bearing age.

Not until every girl now born completes her child-bearing years and she and her daughters have led to the 2.1 rate, would there be offset deaths on a permanent basis.

Following the program, the election of officers for the 1977-78 year occurred. The following officers were elected: President, Charlotte Reed; Vice President, Michele Isenhour; Recording Secretary, Luanne Zarek; Corresponding Secretary, Jean Wiese; Treasurer, Gail Guthman; Extension Officer, Diana Brunner; and His Honor, Glenda Blair.

The business meeting adjourned and refreshments were served by the hostess.
