State Capitol Is Buzzing From 'Brilab' Investigation

AUSTIN—Like a Christmas tree which is turned up-side-down so the snow flakes can float down in chaotic fashion, State Capitol halls buzzed last week with the news that an FBI bribery investigation (code name "Brilab") touched the office of House Speaker Bill Clayton.

Clayton was subpoenaed last week to appear before a Houston grand jury to testify about whether he took a bribe in return for helping an undercover FBI informant gain information about building on the state's employer health insurance program.

The Speaker, who has denied taking a bribe, won a delay until mid-March.

Clayton allegedly received some hundred dollar bills in his office on Nov. 8 from Houston labor leader L. G. Moore following a conference which also involved Joseph Hauser, an FBI informant who identified himself as a Presidential Insurance of America agent.

All accounts of the meeting report that the money was offered as a "political contribution" following a brief discussion of insurance.

Clayton has admitted he took the money, but not as a bribe. He also maintains he has not provided any favors for the money.

Clayton explained he took the money to avoid embarrassing Moore, his past political supporter, in front of their guest Hauser. Clayton said he first laid the money uncounted on his desk, then later gave it to his aide, Rusty Kelley, for safekeeping until it could be returned to Moore. Kelley locked it in a safe in his office where it remained until last week when it was turned over as evidence to the grand jury.

Initial news reports gave the amount as $10,000, but when the safe was opened,
