finished yearling cattle can be easily calculated. At a yearling price of 90 cents per pound, the 30 extra pounds in a 40-cow herd add up to $600 more a year and $2,400 over a four-year period.
Sire selection is one of the most important decisions that cattle producers make because a herd bull affects the beef producer's income for many years.
Many feel that using top quality bulls or performance tested bulls is the cheapest improvement available today. Performance testing simply identifies genetically superior individuals for specific traits. This is the basis for the genetic improvement of the herd and ultimately increasing its profit potential.

Also, many producers are beginning to keep their cattle after weaning and are sending them to commercial feedlots. Improved bull performance should mean more dollars per head when feeding cattle to slaughter weight.
Yearling weight of the herd bull will reflect the gaining ability of his offspring. This trait is 60 per cent heritable. So a 100-pound superior bull would transmit 30 pounds (one-half of contribution) to each offspring.

County Agent's
NOTEBOOK
(By Leroy J. Haglik, County Extension Agent, Colorado County)

Select Bulls On Performance

In selecting a herd bull, the producer should search for one with a high weaning weight that hopefully will be transmitted to offspring. Since the weaning weight trait is about 30 percent heritable, this represents the estimated genetic difference that can be transmitted to offspring. Each parent transmits only half of his genes to offspring. Therefore, a bull with a weaning weight of 100 pounds more than another bull would be expected to produce 15 additional pounds per calf.
Even though this increase seems small, considerable herd and economical improvement can be realized from the weaning weight trait. The extra 15 pounds from a better performing bull on a 40-head herd can make a lot of difference, especially when the bull is kept four years or more. With 60-cent calves, this can add up to $900 more per year or $1,440 over four years.
