Weimar High School Has 'Bomb' Scare

The Houston Police Department's bomb squad was called to the Weimar High School last Thursday to remove a quantity of Picric acid, considered to be unstable and explosive, from the school's laboratory.

The acid, reported to be over eighteen years old, is composed of a mixture of water and nitroglycerine. The water had evaporated and left the crystals which were considered to be unstable and very explosive.

B. D. Morgan, a sergeant with the bomb squad, told the Weimar school officials that while the material was dangerous, it could be handled with proper knowledge. The material was taken from the school and then taken to the city's sewer tanks where it was detonated.

The Weimar school was evacuated for some fifteen minutes while the dangerous substance was removed.

The officer added that this is not the first instance involving the acid and that such calls had been received on several other occasions from schools in the Houston area since warnings of such danger had been made public by the State Education Agency.
