Although the story in The Headlight at that time said that winning games was the criterion for making the decision, many of the school board members said they understood that was not the major reason contracts were not extended.

As of 9 a.m. Wednesday morning, Darden had not accepted the counselor position. His other option is to remain in the coaching position for another year.

At that time, the board could make the decision to retain him, or replace him. He then would have to look for another job in another school system.

Appelt said he felt he might lose the student all together. Others felt that such a move would provide incentive to a student to study academic areas harder, thus learn more.

Middle school principal Charles Abel not only discussed his annual campus report, but presented the board with a report on a program called "Reading Discovery Enrichment in Experiment," a program designed to provide incentive to students to learn more through more reading.

The parental group there said it wanted to express to the board that the program

Both banks told the court that funds idle in the checking account would draw 5.25 percent interest.

In other business, commissioners:

Agreed to place the courthouse on the tour of its history, places and allow the facilities be open to the public, and allow the courthouse square to be used for various public functions.

Agreed the courthouse should be used for elections, when the building is open during the weekdays.
