TIPS TO CLIP

"A Great Buy"

You've undoubtedly noticed the very large pieces of beef in plastic bags displayed in the meat case of your favorite store. A sign was probably posted telling you that those were "primals," "in the bag" and that you could save money buying them. If you missed the idea thinking you wouldn't know what to do with that big hunk-of-meat, you missed a great opportunity.

These primals are just like the pieces from which the packaged cuts in the case were cut in the store meat room. Buying the whole primal can save you considerable money per pound. Don't be turned off by the dark color. The vacuum packaging causes this, it'll "bloom" to the usual bright red when taken out to cut. Just pick the one you like—sirloin tip, ryebe, top round, etc.—and have them cut and wrap it to your liking or you can do this yourself at home. For instance, I recently had a sirloin tip cut into thin sandwich steaks, tip roasts and stew meat. If you're not sure just what types of cuts a certain primal will yield, the Meat Department personnel will gladly answer your questions. You'll have the piece of meat you like, cut the way you want, ready to eat or to put in your freezer—at a savings too!
