1985 Legislative session underway

Texas lawmakers entered the 1985 session of the Legislature last week surrounded by budget deficit forecasts and pressures to reform last summer's school reform law.

Compared with other states, the Texas Legislature has always shown up as bottom-line conservative. This new Legislature will probably be even more austere with the tax dollar, and certainly more right-wing on some political issues.

The Republican Party presence is now stronger than at any other time since Reconstruction days, and the common expectation is that state agencies will feel the belt-tightening pinch, criminals will feel the slap of the long arm of the law, and businesses will see government back off their pocketbooks.

The GOP now holds more than one-third of the House membership and seven state seats. Gone are several liberal Democrats, including Lloyd Doggett from the Senate. With his departure liberals lose their top strategist, publicity-maker, and even cult-hero.

The Senate was elected president pro tem last week: Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls. Farabee is highly respected for his ability to pull various factions into a solution.

Senate debate rules are such that one needs a two-thirds majority vote just to get a bill out for a floor vote. Consequently, a block of 11 senators can roadblock any bill. The Republicans need to locate only four allies among the upper chamber's conservative Democrats to effectively bottle up all liberal legislation.

The reverse is also possible, but when the traditional logjam breaks near adjournment, expect the liberals to be scraping for budget concessions.

House revolution
 The House of Representatives, meanwhile, is so solidly conservative that after Speaker Gib Lewis was overwhelmingly reelected last week, he felt strong enough to take potshots at the federal judges who have mandated new prison system spending.

Lewis' words were critical and reflected a visceral feeling of House members that federal district judge William Wayne Justice is encroaching on the constitutional right of the Legislature to distribute tax revenues.

Speculation promptly started over whether Lewis and House members will actually defy the feds by refusing to write court-ordered expensive prison reforms into the scant budget. Lewis immediately disavowed such thoughts.

Bullock, forecast
 But the speculation isn't far-fetched. This session's revenue forecast is not enough for everyone, and Texas lawmakers don't like being forced to spend money by a life-appointed judge who will never answer to voters at the ballot box.

The forecast is likely going to get worse before it gets better, warned Comptroller Bob Bullock last week. The price of oil on the world spot market must pick up, or Bullock may be forced to lower revenue estimates.

"All I can tell them

(legislators, state agencies) is we're scraping the bottom of a $25 barrel of oil and it might even get worse before it gets better," Bullock said.

No spending bills
 Right now $25 a barrel is a magic number that leaders in the Legislature—and the lobby—are watching with much dread. Any price falling below it is expected to seriously harm the state's oil industry recovery, even to driving the state back into recession.

Loss of revenues in the petroleum industry means loss of tax revenues for state government, and lawmakers are presently in no mood to receive new legislation requiring spending money.

State agencies which increase which spend revenues to provide citizen services. One state employee group last week went so far to suggest a hiring freeze to avoid massive lay-offs next September.

Tax Constitutional
 Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox issued a legal opinion upholding the recent law making the sale of newspapers subject to the state sales tax.

Newspapers were "exempted under the old law, but Mattox said they were "singled out for special favorable treatment and that is no longer the case."

The opinion was sought by Bullock, who some of these new tax but describes it as so difficult to collect that "it's more trouble than it's worth."

Museum Notes

From Prairie Edge Museum:

Visitors from the following states have their names in our registry: California, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, and North Carolina. One visitor came from Canada.

Valentine time is drawing near. How about helping me with a display of many of those "beauties" and "cuties" of long ago by donating or loaning us at least part of your cherished collection? Many of the valentines were all out for romance but does any one remember the comic ones? I believe these cost a penny and were printed on a very cheap grade of paper. Surely many of you recall making some of your valentines out of wallpaper scraps. Then there was the valentine box that we would place on our gate post to receive the heartless missives of our friends.

Another interesting and nostalgic display that you can help us make is that of popular sheet music of the 1920's, 1930's, and 1940's. Does anyone remember the Hit Parade to which several of us in Edna, Texas, used to listen to on Saturday evenings? This was on the radio and there were many beautiful songs played. I could probably be somewhat successful on "Name That Tune" if they would only play many of the "oldies" from that era. Among those from the 20's and 30's are "Let Me Call You Sweetheart," "My Blue Heaven," "Honey," "If I had a Talking Picture of You," and "Winter Wonderland." Some of these are still heard and sung today.

Pete Canaris has donated an Estlinbaum Lumber Co. nail apron and a poster displayed during the time that Harold Thomas was mayor. The poster was one which offered a $250 reward for the arrest and conviction of any person guilty of arson with the city limits of the City of Eagle Lake, Texas.

Remember to call Bill Harrison Sr., Rollin Baker, Elizabeth Boothe or any other museum member if you wish to donate or loan items or to arrange for a special tour. The regular hours during which the museum is open weekly are 9-5 p.m. on Saturdays and Sundays.
