Nutrition and stress

The best menu for coping with long-term stress created by financial difficulty, work or family problems is simply a balanced diet.

A regular routine of eating a variety of fruits, vegetables, breads and cereals, dairy products and protein, will supply all the nutrients you need when you're under stress.

Lawmakers hear joint session address from Bush

STATE CAPITAL HIGHLIGHTS

By Lyndell Williams

TEXAS PRESS ASSOCIATION

State lawmakers advanced the controversial water plan and parroted a bill before winding up last week with a joint session address by Vice President George Bush.

Bush lambasted Congress for extending additional farm credit, and said President Reagan has threatened to veto the bill.

He also preached an anti-Communist line and said the public should be educated about the red-backed Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

Not surprisingly, he also praised the administration's role in increasing federal revenues and bolstering the economy, but legislators sitting in joint session did not interrupt the Vice President's speech with applause, and, in fact, remained very quiet during his address.

The silence puzzled many onlookers.

Bush's hard-line on farm credit surely put many rural lawmakers on the defensive, and his new bout of prosperity may have left on Congress a sense of legislators from Houston, the southeast Texas refinery area, the Rio Grande Valley, as well as farm and ranch counties.

Senate water plan
The Senate voted overwhelmingly to approve a comprehensive, $1.2 billion statewide water plan which was radically different from the House version passed two weeks ago.

The differences will be worked out in conference committee. The House rejected the Senate plan as expected.

The Senate plan, authored by John Montford, D-Lubbock, directs $400 million for water conservation projects and $200 million for agricultural water, compared with roughly half that amount in the House plan for water development.

As approved, the Senate bill authorizes the state to create underground water districts if Opposing attorneys in the felony commercial bribery trial of Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox tried to prove or disprove whether he actually tried to delay the progress of a Houston law firm's bonds.

A former aide to Mattox, now his chief of the bond division, described a conversation she had with Mattox on June 10, 1983, in which she, in answer to his inquiries, informed him how to slow down the pace of bond approval.

She testified that a week later the firm's division chief told her to hold the firm's bonds until it could be determined that unethical violations by some members of the firm were not spilling over into their bond business.

Five days later, she testified

House parroted bill

Surprisingly, black lawmakers expected to make it to floor debate in the next two weeks after a lopsided victory in a House committee last week.

The bill's sponsor, Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlinga of Corpus Christi, made concessions to minority and law enforcement groups in forging the 161 panel approval.

Minority groups, it was reported, were granted assurances they would get at least 15 percent of racetrack construction contracts, the first right to purchase 15 percent of race track stock, and affirmative action in racetrack hiring.

Proceeds will go to the State, five percent to winners' purses and seven percent to track owners.

Surprisingly, black lawmakers could not make stick their original demand that part of the State's share would be dedicated to welfare, the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

If the bill passes the House this month, it is expected to sail through the Senate, which approved the issue last session.

the bonds were sent on to the Comptroller's Office with Mattox's approval.

Credit rate drops
Texas consumers got a shot in the arm last week when the state's consumer credit agency lowered bank card rates to 16.4 percent, effective April 1, the lowest in four years.

The current ceiling is 19.6 percent. Rates on charge cards by individual retailers are not affected.

Short takes —Dallas blacks have been sending signals they will seek to replace white liberal state Sen. Oscar Maury in 1986 with one from their ranks, perhaps State Rep. Paul Ragsdale.

—When educators fighting mandatory teacher competency tests today suggested that legislators ought to take similar exams, Port Arthur Senator Carl Parker cut the tension by joking "If we were to take ignorance out of the Legislature, we wouldn't have representative government."

—The Goddess of Liberty, top of the State Capitol will need arm surgery soon or she will drop her torch, according to the state architect in charge of restoring the building.

He released photographs which show a 20-inch crack in the left shoulder of the zinc statue, and said he is still mystified "how a hundred years ago we could put that thing up there, and now in 1985 we can't figure how to get it back down."

—A bill prohibiting state officials from having live-in companions on their payroll is viewed by some as a direct attack on Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower by the Amarillo state senator who may run against him next year.

State Sen. Bill Sarpius said Hightower has had a live-in relationship for several years with one of his assistant commissioners.
