Heat, humidity combined are dangerous

Recent sporadic rains in Texas may have seemed to relieve the oppressive heat wave that broke records throughout the state, but with the moisture came perhaps a greater danger - high humidity combined with the heat.

Even people accustomed to the Texas climate sometimes fail to realize the dangers posed by the combination of high humidity and heat if precautions are not taken. "The affect of humid heat can be deadly for the very young, the elderly and persons already weakened by illness," said Dr. Cliff Price, associate commissioner for personal health at the Texas Department of Health.

Dr. Price said a recent report shows that in an average year, some 200 people in the U.S. die as the result of hot weather. The report stated that overall mortality rates increased dramatically during severe weather. The National Center for Health Statistics has calculated that since an extreme heat wave was the unique factor during the summer of 1980, when mortality rates jumped sharply, as many as 1,700 deaths nationally may have been heat related.

Dr. Price said that high temperature alone is physically tolerable to most people, but in combination with humidity, it can cause an individual's cooling mechanism, perspiration, to work overtime. "If one fails to replace the fluids and salts lost through perspiration, dehydration or hyperthermia, can occur," he said. Symptoms of dehydration are muscle cramps, nausea, dizziness, headache, and low blood pressure. If fluids are not replaced, heat stroke can ensue causing sudden weakness, severe headache, loss of consciousness, brain damage and death if the victim is not quickly treated.

"To avoid danger of overheating, people should dress in light-colored, loose-fitting clothing. They should drink more than their normal intake of water, and be sure to have water available if they need it. They should seek good ventilation. And perhaps as important as anything else, they should remain aware of their own physical conditions and the weather conditions," Dr. Price added.

"Television and radio reports are especially helpful to persons planning activities outside," Dr. Price said that in recent years, meteorologists have begun using the term, "heat stress" or "heat index" to describe the relationship between temperatures and humidity.

The heat stress index is a numeric scale by which the degree of discomfort a person may feel at a given temperature and humidity. Dr. Price said that although the table does not allow for the variables of wind and shade, which can greatly influence an individual's tolerance of heat and humidity, the index reading, like a thermometer reading, is useful in helping persons make needed precautions against hyperthermia. A heat stress index reading of 105 is considered very dangerous.

Texas farm receipts to be below 1985

While 1985 was a tough year economically for Texas farmers, 1986 likely will be worse, says a Texas A&M University economist.

Preliminary data show Texas farm receipts far below levels of the first half of 1985. Even with some improvement in livestock prices over the last half of the year, overall farm receipts will be considerably less than in 1985.

U.S. crop prices the first half of this year were down 13 percent from levels a year ago. On the positive side, however, fuel and interest cost have been down and will help the net farm income situation. Farmers need to build their business around financial and price risk management as they move ahead.
