UTMB accepts county medical contract

The University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston has accepted a contract with Colorado County to provide secondary medical coverage for the county's indigent patients.

That was one of many items on the agenda Monday for the twice-monthly meeting of Colorado County Commissioners.

The commissioners received a letter from the Medical Branch acknowledging the contract. County judge Lester Cranek said the county will reimburse UTMB's John Sealy Hospital for 50 percent of the cost of care for county patients admitted there. He did question the reality of that 50-percent cut, noting that a room charge of $175 when reduced by half still is not much of a savings.

In order to be admitted to John Sealy, judge Cranek said the patient must be referred from a local hospital when that hospital is not able to provide the higher level of treatment. He said the county has a "letter of agreement" with all three local hospitals that they will provide primary care. Because the hospitals are financially strapped, he said they would not accept a re-imbursement rate of only 80 percent of the bill, as suggested by commissioners last year.

Recently, an indigent patient was accepted into Columbus Community Hospital for an emergency appendectomy. The county questioned the part of the bill for $1,800 for drugs. Cranek said the hospital charged $600 for drugs, and $1,200 for administering the drugs. Cranek said the hospital told the county the administering charge covers the cost of the hospital staff on duty to look after the patient.

On another front concerning indigent health care, Cranek said only one doctor, Jose Ugarte of Eagle Lake, has signed up to be recognized by the county to be reimbursed for indigent health care work. A Columbus doctor, Kirk Anderson, has given the county a verbal agreement, Cranek said. When reimbursed, the county only pays the amount of the bill approved by the state.

While other doctors still see patients as needed, they are not seeking government compensation.

There are very strict guidelines on how a person qualifies for indigent health care.

In other business Monday, commissioners:

•Held a public hearing on a proposal to close undeveloped right of way in the Highland Park Subdivision. See story elsewhere in this issue.

•Appointed John Jones to be a special trapper in the Shaws Bend area.

•Discussed the possibility of a joint purchase agreement with Weimar for a machine used to clean ditches. If purchased new it would cost $86,000 but a used one has been found through another government agency and is available for $8,000. The cost will be shared by the city and county precinct two.

•Discussed vehicle liability coverage through the County Risk Management Pool through the Texas Association of Counties.

•Held a long discussion about a road in the Deer Hollow area between Sheridan and Weimar. The residents there want the road taken into the county system. Commissioner Butch Strunk said it could not be accepted because it does not meet county standards.

•Agreed the Columbus Live Oak Art club could use the courthouse May 16 and 17 for storage of the art to be exhibited at the Magnolia Homes Tour that weekend. The homes tour also was given permission to use the courthouse grounds, and basement restrooms, provided they purchase restroom supplies and hire building security. The county, through its Historical Commission, will have a booth at the homes tour to sell copies of the county history book.

•Accepted a report from the Nesbitt Memorial Library. There are nearly 20,000 volumes in the library and circulation last year was 40,000 books. They also circulated 1,700 video tapes. The library has 4,279 registered card holders, with 648 were added last year.

•Agreed to have the carpets in the courthouse cleaned by a Brenham firm. The cost will be $900.

•Adopted a safety policy statement to reduce on the job injuries. The county has such insurance with the Texas Association of Counties which suggested the policy be adopted.

•Approved a request to participate in the 1987 Summer Job Program coordinated by the Palacios I.S.D.
