Mud throwing shatters Republican's 11th commandment

With the election just weeks away, the gloves are off in both primaries. In the Democratic gubernatorial race, Attorney General Jim Mattox gambled to preempt the Texas labor convention endorsement over the objections of its president.

State Capitol Highlights
By Lyndell Williams

Meanwhile, GOP contenders combined to battle frontrunner Clayton Williams for a previous history of drinking and brawling.

One observer noted that Mattox "hones in on issues like a heat-seeking missile," and it has paid off in recent weeks.

The commandment worked fine when Republicans were a minority party, but last week's mud throwing was inevitable — one cannot win the brass ring with a wimp campaign.

These are the biggies, the groups that Republicans blast as the "special interest groups" that dictate policy. Unapologetic and unabashed, Mattox takes a strong stand for them, expecting them to stand strong for him at election time.

Former Gov. Mark White inflated his war chest by including $1 million he borrowed from a bank last month and repaid two weeks later.

On the Democratic side of the fence, Treasurer Ann Richards' status as frontrunner is now questionable, and she admitted for the first time that she and Mattox will probably be run-off opponents.

In the past three weeks, Mattox has dispelled early doubts about his strength with a textbook strategy that stunned everyone but his camp.

Some judges loudly accused Mattox of selling them out for minority votes. Days later, Mattox emerged from the Mexican-American Democrats' convention just 22 delegates short of winning the MAD endorsement.

Like a well-oiled conquering army, his campaign moves from victory to victory, making a mockery of an autumn poll painting him far behind primary opponents Richards and

Mattox Woos Labor
This week he's gambling for the Texas AFL-CIO endorsement, despite pleas from its president, Joe

Gunn, who seeks to avoid bloodying or muddying the labor camp. Gunn, who's not anti-Mattox, conceded that Mattox has more labor union support than Richards or White.

But Gunn doesn't think that Mattox can muster the two-thirds needed for official endorsement, and then AFL-CIO rules will keep union membership from campaigning for Mattox in the primary.

Richards and White want labor to remain officially neutral. Mattox, sensing weakness on their part, is going for the endorsement. If he wins it outright, it'll be the biggest coup of the primary so far, on either ballot.

Democrats Seeking Debate
Democrats seeking a TV debate between their nominees, State Sen. Hugh Parmer, and Republican U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm may not get that exposure for their lesser-known Parmer.

Gramm said in the last election Democrat U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen would not debate Beau Boulter, "who was a sitting GOP congressman, so I feel no obligation."

Strong-arming Utility
Public Utility Commissioner Joe Campbell, a Democrat, accused GOP Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance of "strong-arming" a South Texas power company into switching from natural gas to a more expensive fuel during the recent freeze, thereby raising utility bills for South Texas residents.

Hance answered he wanted to make sure Dallas-area residents had enough heat, and that he will make sure South Texans won't pay higher bills.
