New Medicine for Cystic Fibrosis

Cystic fibrosis (CF) is a genetic disease which occurs in one of about every 2,000 live births in the U.S. Organs most affected by CF include the lungs, gastrointestinal tract, and pancreas. The most severe problems associated with CF result from changes in the lungs brought about by mucus secretions. According to Merck Manual, fifty percent of persons with CF have lung problems such as coughing and wheezing. Lung infections are common. Coughing may be accompanied by gagging and sleep problems. CF results in pancreatic enzyme deficiencies, leading to fat and protein digestion problems. Fat soluble vitamin deficiencies also may occur.

Treatment of CF is directed at correcting the pancreatic enzyme deficiency, handling weight loss and nutritional problems, dealing with the thick mucus in the lungs, and caring for infection in the lungs that may result from plugs of mucus. Medicines prescribed for CF include pancreatic enzymes, vitamins, antibiotics, steroids, bronchodilators, and medicines that help dissolve mucus plugs in the lungs. In December the U.S. Food and Drug Administration approved a new medicine for CF. The medicine is called dornase alpha (Pulmozyme). This new medicine is reported to reduce infections in the lungs by breaking up the thick accumulations of mucus.
