Jobs

A 12th grade education, high school dropouts will qualify for only 14% of the new jobs.
Of the 29 occupations with the largest future growth, Sharp commented that 11 require no training beyond high school. They tend to be low paying service jobs such as janitors, gardeners and truck drivers. Some could be handled by high school dropouts if employers are willing to hire workers without diplomas.

Five of the 29 occupations require at least a baccalaureate or bachelor's degree such as registered nurses, elementary and secondary school teachers, general managers, accountants and auditors.

The rest of the high growth occupations require at least some post secondary education such as child care workers, nurses aides, sales representatives and computer related occupations, Sharp concluded.
