Foot Facts

By Dr. Eric R. Tepper, Podiatrist WHEN WALKING IS A PAIN

For most people, walking is the perfect exercise. It is good for just about every part of the body, particularly for the feet, and it can help you feel great. For some people, however, walking causes aching and cramping of feet and legs, sometimes severe enough that one might avoid walking, leading to a more and more sedentary lifestyle. Such cramping may be a symptom of a condition called intermittent claudication, caused when arteriosclerosis (a disease in which arteries are blocked by fatty deposits) slows the blood flow to foot and leg muscles. As the condition by fatty deposits) slows the blood flow to foot and leg muscles. As the condition progresses, the pains may occur even while resting. Treatment may include exercises, vitamin supplements, medications, and physical therapy.

If adverse conditions restrict mobility or activity, the entire body can be affected. Don't fall victim to this situation. Seek professional podiatric treatment before little problems grow into big ones. And remember, your feet don't have to hurt. Caring for your feet is an important factor in promoting good health, and teaching you how to prevent foot problems is one of our primary goals.
