Compromise health care plan approved by lawmakers

State lawmakers have approved a compromise plan that would provide health care to about half of the adults expected to receive coverage under the Legislature's Medicaid revision plan.

Gov. George W. Bush told lawmakers earlier that the state could not afford all the changes included in the Legislature's plan.

One senator said the compromise would simply shift the burden to local health care providers.

"The local entities have a tremendous concern about what this is going to dump in their lap and how much we're going to expect them to pay that they're not paying right now," said Sen. Mike Moncrief, D-Fort Worth.

An earlier proposal which Gov. Bush backed, was rejected by the House and Senate health care committees. It would have expanded Medicaid rolls by 225,000 adults next year.

The plan would not have reinvested savings from managed care into the Medicaid program - a key provision in the Legislature's reform package. Lawmakers had planned to use the savings from managed care to expand Medicaid rolls by 486,000 adults.

The compromise proposal, which was unanimously approved by the committees, would add 225,000 adults to the Medicaid rolls by limiting eligibility to single adults who have no children and earn no more than $3,000 a year, or 45% of the poverty level.

Coverage would not be guaranteed, but the proposal includes a target of guaranteed coverage for 12 months.

The new plan still must be approved by the federal government, which must give the state permission to waive certain federal rules to implement the changes.

Karen Hughes, Gov. Bush's press secretary, called the compromise a "more conservative and cautious approach."

"The governor wanted to make sure that as people are transferred from county indigent care to Medicaid that we put children and families first, and this clearly does that," Hughes said.

But Montcrief said the plan would make the situations worse for hospitals because it concentrates on children, who face less risk of contacting serious illnesses.

"It's going to increase the burden, and it's going to reduce their enthusiasm over participation," he said.

Judge's Comments Blasted

Attorney General Dan Morales and an Hispanic lawmaker from West Texas last week criticized comments by a judge who ordered a Mexican native to speak English to her 5-year-old daughter.

State District Judge Samuel Kiser of Amarillo says he is standing firm on his order, but said he will meet this week with anyone in the community who is concerned by his ruling.

"I do feel it is necessary for parents to facilitate their children's education, and thereby stand by my ruling that this child be truly bilingual," he said in a written statement.

Kiser's statement came in response to news reports that, at a summer hearing, he told Marta Laureano she was abusing her daughter by speaking only Spanish to her. He ordered her to begin speaking English to the girl, as well as Spanish.

"I think the judge was way off base," Morales said. "One danger that I can see here is in the prospect of trivializing real child abuse."

Meanwhile, Rep. Pete Gallego, D-Alpine, promised to "take whatever steps necessary next legislative session to see to it that decisions such as this are eliminated."

No Gun Bans in City Park

When carrying concealed handguns become legal in Texas, the weapons may be banned from businesses, buses and county parks, but not in city parks, Attorney General Dan Morales ruled last week.

Most Texas cities and counties currently ban guns and other weapons from their parks. However, Morales ruled that "the Legislature has specifically taken away a municipality's authority to prohibit or restrict the licensed carrying of a concealed handgun."

Reaction to the decision was mixed. While business owners and transit officials praised the opinion, city officials questioned why cities were left out.

PIT AND FISSURE SEALANT

Wouldn't it be nice if we could paint our bodies with an invisible sealant so we'd never gain an inch of fat? In effect, scientists have come up with such a device for teeth. It doesn't prevent fat (teeth don't get fat), but it does seal out cavities.

Dentists can apply a clear plastic coating to the grooves and depressions (pits and fissures) of the chewing surfaces of back teeth (molars) where plaque and food particles collect. It acts as an invisible barrier, protecting these decay-prone areas from decay. How about this? Studies have shown the sealants can reduce tooth decay by as much as 90% to 100%. We recommend sealants for all children.

Application is simple and fast. The teeth to be sealed are cleaned and swabbed with a solution that helps the sealant adhere to the surface. The sealant is then brushed onto the teeth and allowed to harden. Sealants do wear away eventually and may need to be reapplied.

Presented as a public service to promote better dental health. From the office of JOHN B. MYRES, D.D.S., 704 S. McCarty Avenue, Eagle Lake, 234-3525.

Caution Using Some Medicines After Stroke
A stroke occurs when a section of the brain is damaged because the blood supply to that area of the brain is disturbed. Consequences of a stroke include loss of memory, blockage and/or rupture of blood vessels in the brain, and paralysis which can lead to difficulty in speaking and walking.
Recovery from a stroke may be difficult. While some damaged nerve tracts may never be restored, unaffected areas of the brain often can be taught to assume control of a lost function. If you have had a stroke you may be told to stop smoking and take blood pressure medicines. Blood thinner medicines also may be prescribed if the flow of blood to one or more areas of the brain has been restricted.
According to a recent study published in Neurology, certain medicines may delay a person's recovery from a stroke. According to the study, two high blood pressure medicines (clonidine and prazosin), two anticonvulsants (phenobarbital and phenytoin), benzodiazepine sedatives (diazepam-like drugs), and two tranquilizer medicines (haloperidol and prochlorperazine) tend to slow recovery time from a stroke, if taken within 30 days of the stroke. Based on this study, it seems wise for stroke patients to discuss all of their medicines with their physician and their pharmacist.

Sunday School Alliance being formed

The congregations of the Episcopal, Methodist and Presbyterian Churches are offering a combined Sunday School for children from the age of three to 12th grade. Any and all children are welcome.

A committee made up of representatives from all three churches have been meeting to finalize plans for the Sunday School Alliance.

The churches, faced with eroding interest and attendance, are determined to re-invigorate their educational program as the core of their Christian ministry to the entire community.

All agree that this effort can be better accomplished together than separately.

All classes will begin at 9:30 a.m. starting on Sept. 17 at these locations:

3-4 years old: United Methodist Church

5 yrs. old & kindergarten: United Methodist Church

1st & 2nd grades: United Methodist Church

3rd & 5th grades: Christ Episcopal Church

6th to 8th grades: First Presbyterian Church

9th to 12th grades: First Presbyterian Church.

The committee has carefully selected a non-denominational, Christian curriculum for the classes. Teachers are being selected from members of the three congregations.

If you have any questions about the program, you may contact the ministers of any one of the three churches: Rev. Russ Minter, Christ Episcopal Church; Rev. Larry Bailey, United Methodist Church; or Rev. Richard Avery, First Presbyterian Church.

To introduce the Alliance, the churches are holding a get-acquainted celebration at Eagle Hill, 307 E. State Street, on Sunday, Sept. 10 beginning at 5 p.m.

Everyone is invited! Barbecue and drinks will be provided. Please bring a covered dish if you plan to attend.

We hope to see you there.
