The Other Santa Claus

By Rollin H. Baker

Chapter Seven - Decision In Malaya

The tour-tram continued on its airborne way - seemingly for hours and hours. Finally the elves could see that they had passed beyond land in every direction. Now all they could view through their port-holes was island-strewn water. At long last Sparty's announcement came for the next stop.

The restless passengers, wiggling a little in their seats and looking down, could see inviting verdant hills and valleys. The elves were anxious to get their feet back on solid ground, feel the breezes blowing through their hair, and have their picnics.

"Welcome to the Malay Peninsula," said Sparty over the public address system. "The great city of Singapore lies just south of us, on an island," he explained. "This locality is one of the southernmost of Santa's stops."

In unison, the elves gave out a rousing cheer. Tangled tropical forest cloaked much of the land surface, appearing almost too dense for suitable openings for landings. Nevertheless, Chief Pilot Sorab, looking carefully, allowed the crowded vehicle to reduce speed, lose altitude, and finally hover just above ground.

At last, he found an opening and brought the craft to rest on a grass-covered plot in a broad valley. Up and down and bordering a stream filled with turbulent, muddy water were immense trees shrouded with vines and flowering undergrowth.

However, the hillsides, covered with groves of luxuriant long, broad-leaved plants flanked, this landing site. Humans were near at hand.

Children and grownups, high on the slopes above, were cutting stalks of green fruits - actually bananas - and loading them into carts drawn by heavy-bodied cow-like creatures. These were water buffalo, the standard beasts of burden in this part of the world.

The local people could, of course, not see the tiny visitors or their tour-tram. Neither could they hear the shrill voices of the elves nor the whir of the ship's rocket engines.

Before the passengers were allowed to leave the tour-tram, Brother Sigmund called for everyone's attention.

"As Sparty has already announced," said Brother Sigmund, "we have landed on the Malay Peninsula - hot and humid!"

"That's for sure," wailed Tiny Jove, wiping the perspiration from his brow.

Everyone laughed. Brother Sigmund continued, "According to Santa we should be approaching the edge of the earth."

"Well!" answered a chorus of travelers, "let us look over the edge. What are we waiting for?"

"Please refrain from undue exuberance," said Sister Belinda, as she quelled the outcry. "Our Arctic terms assure us of no such opportunity. In fact, they have patrolled this southern area for years without seeing any edge at all."

"Besides," offered Brother Sigmund, "these faithful birds claim that if we proceed southward, the weather will start getting progressively cool."

Museum adds to collection

A recent addition to the Prairie Edge Museum's collection of local antique farm machinery was a John Deere rake donated by Mrs. Nellie Frnk.

The rake originally belonged to Mrs. Frnk's grandparents, John and Frances Schmitt, and was a part of the estate of her late aunt and uncle, Annie and Elvort Drymalla in the Ramsey area.

The Museum would like to thank Schindler LPG Inc. for the use of their winch truck and Steve Alamanza for operating it. Also, Jason Brunner and Kevin Schmitt for manning the truck and trailer on which the rake was transported.

The Prairie Edge Museum is anxious to add to its collection of farm equipment and would welcome more donations of this kind.
