WHEN YOU'VE LOST A TOOTH

You may think losing one tooth is of no real consequence, until you see the results of the chain reaction that begins to take place. The process is gradual and you may not be aware of what's happened until a serious problem develops.

When you smile broadly, you may not feel any embarrassment if the missing tooth is in the back of your mouth. Perhaps not now, but in time there will be certain facial changes. Your cheek, for example, may slowly start to sink into the space once maintained by the missing tooth. This may cause a sagging, puckering, and wrinkling of the skin, giving your face an older look than your years. Inside, the missing tooth will contribute to the drifting of adjacent teeth, forming pockets where bacteria can thrive. The resulting gum disease, if not treated in time, can lead to decay and tooth loss.

Missing teeth are not to be ignored if you're concerned about your dental health and your appearance. When you have a tooth extracted and your dentist recommends that the missing tooth be replaced with an artificial one, take his advice.

Presented as a public service to promote better dental health. From the office of JOHN B. MYRES, D.D.S., 700 S. McCarty, Eagle Lake, 234-3525.

Foot Facts

By Dr. Eric R. Tepper, Podiatrist
FOOT SURGERY & DIABETICS

Diabetics who choose to have foot or ankle surgery may be at greater risk for bone and joint degeneration, according to a recent study presented to the American Orthopaedic Foot and Ankle Society. Because of nerve damage, diabetics are less sensitive to foot pain. Consequently, they are susceptible to recurring ulcerations, foot and ankle instability, and deformities that make wearing shoes or braces impossible. When they try to correct these problems with surgery, they can develop Charcot disease, a destructive form of bone and joint degeneration. Surgeons are seeing more complications related to diabetics' foot surgeries because more procedures are being done to prevent amputation. Amputation used to be the diabetic's only choice for treating severe foot complications.

November is National Diabetes Month, designed to communicate the seriousness of the disease and the importance of proper diabetes control. Here at Rice Medical Center, we've seen the results of untreated and self-treated diabetic foot problems and we can't advise strongly enough for diabetics to seek professional care. Whether you are dealing with diabetes-related problems or feet that just hurt, please give us a call at 234-5571.

P.S. Immobilizing a patient in a non-weight-bearing cast after surgery can help prevent or reduce the risk of Charcot disease.
