Foot Facts

By Dr. Eric R. Tepper, Podiatrist

HELP PREVENTING CHARCOT'S JOINT

New research suggests that simple ice packs may slow or prevent the irreversible foot degeneration that occurs with Charcot's joints. Diabetics are prone to Charcot's joints due to the deterioration of peripheral nerves that often occurs with diabetes. The first sign of damage is typically a foot numbness and blood engorgement that can increase skin temperature. Higher foot temperatures can alter the mechanics of the foot ligaments, which leads to the biomechanical and structural destruction associated with Charcot's joints. The process happens slowly and often goes unnoticed by diabetics because of loss of sensation in the foot. When detected early enough, the application of ice packs has shown promise in slowing and preventing any deterioration.

Untreated foot problems can be more than just a momentary nuisance. They can develop into complicated conditions with serious consequences, so be sure to treat your feet to specialized care. At our offices at Rice Medical Center, you'll find we are as concerned as you are about the health of your feet. If your feet are suffering because of injury or trauma, skin or nail conditions, or hereditary problems, we invite you to call 234-5571 for a Tuesday appointment for personalized foot care.

P.S. Careful monitoring of the feet is essential in detecting problems that can cause permanent damage and even amputation.
