September is Cholesterol Education Month

Over 50 million Americans have blood cholesterol levels that are dangerously high - the largest risk factor for heart disease, and the leading cause of death in the US. Yet, all cholesterol is not harmful. HDL cholesterol ("good cholesterol") fights formation of plaques (associated with hardening of the arteries). LDL cholesterol ("bad cholesterol") facilitates plaque formation. Total cholesterol includes LDL, HDL, and other cholesterol types.

LDL blood cholesterol levels ideally should be below 140 mg/dL, and HDL levels should be above 40 mg/dL. Women "naturally" have higher HDL levels than men. Risk of heart disease and related problems increases as a person's total cholesterol rises, with 200 mg/dL typically at the top of the healthy range (depending on one's HDL level).

Several cholesterol-lowering medicines are available. Cholestyramine (Questran) and cholestipol (Colestid) enhance LDL cholesterol removal. Niacin can reduce cholesterol production. The "statins," which include fluvastatin (Lescol) and lovastatin (Mevacor) block cholesterol production and enhance its removal from the bloodstream.
