RAIDER REVIEW

The history of RHS volleyball

The history of volleyball at Rice High School (RHS) is unknown to many. This may be because volleyball was nonexistent for more than 20 years.

In 1970, when the high school was opened in Altair, a volleyball program was included in the athletic program.

However, this was the only time fans at Rice would see volleyball for more than 20 years.

Mrs. Grigar was in school at the time and can vaguely remember the incident which would ban volleyball from RHS.

From what she can recall, a fight took place in the locker room that involved some Raider volleyball players and an opponent from another team.

The fight supposedly originated

PSAT update

By Meagan Staff

The PSAT or Preliminary SAT was offered to Rice High School students Tuesday, Oct. 16. This test was given to help students prepare for the SAT. It measures the verbal, math and writing skills students have developed during the course of their education.

The test is offered to all sophomore, junior and senior high school students. It may be taken as many times as the students would like, but only once a year.

Taking the test will not harm the students' chances of getting into college; just better prepare them.

To find out if your child is registered to take the test, contact one of the school's guidance counselors.

If your child did take part in the PSAT Oct. 16, the results will be in sometime in Dec.

For further information, contact the guidance counselor at your child's school.

from the Rice players. UIL temporarily suspended volleyball at Rice.

However, the principal at the time decided to completely do away with volleyball.

Volleyball was to never be played again.

In 1989, parents and students campaigned and volleyball was brought back into the athletic program.

This was great for the girls who were interested but Rice was very behind in their skills. An experienced coach was hired and the program began.

After one year, the coach left and was hired by a college.

After this, the volleyball program traveled down a very rocky road. Coaches came and went. No coach was eager to come to such an unestablished program.

Rice went through five coaches in six years... all of them inexperienced in volleyball.

In the fall of '96, Coach Margie Heard was offered the job and she accepted. She stayed three years and began to build the team from the ground up.

In 1998, a record was set with a total of nine games won. This was a great accomplishment for the girls and the program.

Wendy Dietrich was offered the head volleyball coaching position in 1999. She believed in the girls and knew they had talent. She's been very demanding and has expected a lot, but knew the girls could do it.

Coach Dietrich has brought team leadership and determination into the volleyball program. Her hard work and long hours have paid off. This is the first year the volleyball team will be participating in the playoffs.

The Lady Raiders are making history and everyone is very proud of them.

Hopefully, this is the beginning of a new era for our volleyball program!

TOOTH DECAY DURING PREGNANCY

Some pregnant women develop a craving for certain foods. They get piliated by pickles or some other food that they can usually take or leave alone when they're not pregnant. Some develop a craving for sweets.

As long as you're taking good care of your teeth and mouth, you can keep dental problems to a minimum. But if there's any question about tooth decay, you should see your dentist. Tooth decay is an infection, and any infection can be harmful, especially to pregnant women and the child they're carrying.

Left untreated, a decayed tooth can lead to root or gum infection, spreading the disease within the mouth. Some pregnant women are more prone to cavities and gum disease because of a hormone imbalance. That's good reason for a dental checkup.

Tooth disease and early signs of gum disease are not easy to spot without professional help. The dentist is one professional a pregnant woman should visit to make sure she's in good health.
