A retired librarian remembered...

As the election results came in last week and it quickly became apparent that all the Republicans on the statewide ticket were winning big, a retired librarian remembered her days as a teenage reporter in Sweetwater shortly after World War II.

She had been dispatched by her editor to the old Bluebonnet Hotel to interview three visitors to town - Republicans.

The trio, then about as welcome in rural Texas as union organizers, had come to Nolan County to see if there was any interest in organizing a local Republican party.

"From what I'd always heard and had read about Republicans," she remembered, "I was a little scared."

One of them later complimented her father, the local Chamber of Commerce manager, on her politeness in listening to their case and her fairness in writing about it.

Back then, Republicans in Texas were as scarce as pine trees in Monahans.

Many Texans had heard from their parents or grandparents about the near-despotic reign of Reconstruction era Republic Gov. E.J. Davis in the early 1870s and they figured Republicans were still not to be trusted.

Not until Ronald Reagan went to the White House in 1980 did Texans begin voting for Republicans in any significant numbers. Eventually, the tidal change was so powerful that Democrats began announcing their conversion to the Republican side of politics like so many saved souls at a brush arbor revival.

Given the results from the 2002 mid-term elections, it now seems as if it's the Democrats who are in short supply in the Lone Star state. More than 2 million of them did vote for John Sharp in his race for lieutenant governor, but 2.3 million Republicans voted for his opponent, David Dewhurst.

The race for Lt. gov. attracted more Democratic votes than for any other Democrat statewide officer seeker on the ballot. Sharp got 46% of the vote.

Republican Carole Keeton Rylander got 64.21% of the vote in her successful bid to continue as comptroller. (And Democrat Marty Akins, running against her, got the lower percentage of any of the Democratic candidates, 32.8).

Laredo oil millionaire Tony Sanchez didn't break the 2 million mark in his effort to unseat Gov. Rick Perry, but he spent more than 30 times that many million in his unsuccessful bid.

"Talk about Texas values," one old time Texan said the day after. "What's Texas coming to when $70 million won't buy the Governor's Mansion?" Even some Democrats were taken aback by Sanchez' "I'm not conceding" speech, delivered in time for Austin and other big TV market newscasts Nov. 5.

A smiling Sanchez, clearly already defeated, said he was going to continue to give Perry "hell" and later repeated it, comparing the contest to 1948. (That was a reference to the famous "Dewey Defeats Truman" newspaper headline, not to the 1948 Senate race that made Lyndon Johnson a U.S. senator.)

With only a couple hundred of 8,554 precincts counted, Perry had received 57.88% of the vote to Sanchez' 39.92%.

So what happened? Clearly, the name "Bush" continues to have political clout in Texas, even though the name was not on the ballot this time — the first time, in fact, in 22 years. The negative advertising probably cost both sides some points or fractions thereof. Finally, it just may be that Texas is a Republican state.

The day after the election, another important political campaign resumed after a pre-election hiatus: the behind-the-scenes work that will determine who will preside as speaker of the house when the legislature meets in Austin in Jan.

Republican Tom Craddick of Midland was expected to announce that he had the votes to take over the job from incumbent Pete Laney of Hale Center, Texas' sole Democrat in a position of statewide power. That question will be settled Jan. 14.

Twenty-four hours after the polls closed, parking on 11th Street in front of the Capitol was even tougher than usual because of all the television station remote broadcast vans.

The scene in downtown Austin was of TV reporters standing in the bright, generator-powered light trying to explain to the voters of Texas what had happened the day before.

No matter what they said, no matter who won or lost, no matter how much money was spent by those who tried to get elected or didn't get elected, the big pink building at the head of Congress Avenue still stood.

'Deputy Santa' underway

Colorado County Sheriff R.H. "Curly" Wied announced the "Deputy Santa Program" for 2002 is getting underway at the Sheriff's Department.

Contacts are currently being made to begin collecting information concerning needy children throughout the Colorado County area.

Last year's "Deputy Santa Program" was an overwhelming success. Over 800 presents were given to the less fortunate children throughout the County, and you, the citizens of Colorado County, along with many local businesses, donated toys for all ages that were distributed to those children, who, without your help, would have had a less cheerful holiday season.

Wied is aiming to make Christmas 2002 another overwhelming success. Getting started now allows plenty of time for the citizens to drop off their toys and get familiar with the "Deputy Santa Program". The program will be limiting the age group who will receive gifts to 12 years old and under.

Anyone wishing to donate items to the "Deputy Santa Program" may drop off the toys at the Colorado County Detention Center, 2215 Walnut in Columbus, where a drop box has been placed, for your convenience.

Sheriff Wied says his office will be accepting toys through Dec. 13.
