John Sharp's Tax Reform Plan Ready For Legislature

AUSTIN — John Sharp has delivered, and soon it will be the Texas Legislature's turn.

On March 29, Gov. Rick Perry praised the bipartisan tax reform plan shepherded by Sharp, the former state comptroller who chaired the 24-member Texas Tax Reform Commission appointed by Perry last fall.

The commission held a series of public hearings around the state beginning in January, receiving input from private citizens, businesses and local governmental bodies.

Perry has summoned the Legislature to Austin to convene April 17.

Tax reform will be at the top of the agenda.

Sharp's plan boasts a $6 billion property tax cut, and respreads the pain by initiating a business tax of 1 percent on gross receipts. If adopted by the Legislature as recommended, no business, not even doctors and lawyers, will escape this new form of taxation. And gone will be the current business franchise tax.

Also under the plan, more tax liability will be heaped on smokers. The tax on a pack of cigarettes will increase to $1.41 from the present rate of 41 cents.

Perry said the plan would make homeownership possible for more Texans by lowering property taxes, generate more revenue for public education, and stimulate job growth.

Already, business groups are signaling support for the Sharp plan. Among them are the newly formed Texas Manufacturers Association and the Texas Builders Association.

The Texas Supreme Court has placed a June 1 deadline on the Legislature to act on tax reform.

Students march on Capitol

Following the example of the half-million people who gathered in downtown Los Angeles a few days earlier to protest pending federal immigration legislation, hundreds of Austin-area high school students walked out of classes March 30 and made their way to the state Capitol to stage a peaceful demonstration.

Students marched up to 15 miles to speak in support of amnesty for undocumented immigrants, and of the ways society benefits from their families' presence in Texas.

Sen. Gonzalo Barrientos, D-Austin, met students on the Capitol grounds to tell them he appreciated the reasoning behind their act of civil disobedience. He assured them they had been heard and then asked them to return to school.

Abramoff to serve prison term

A federal court in Miami sentenced Washington, D.C., lobbyist Jack Abramoff to nearly six years in prison for fraud and conspiracy in the purchase of a Florida-based gambling cruise ship line.

Abramoff's dealings with Texas lawmakers are still under investigation.

On March 31, Tony Rudy, a former top aide of U.S. Rep. Tom DeLay, R-Sugar Land, and lobbyist with "Team Abramoff," pleaded guilty to an Abramoff-related conspiracy charge and is cooperating with federal investigators.

Meanwhile, U.S. Rep. Lloyd Doggett, D-Austin, filed the Stealth Lobbyist Disclosure Act.

Doggett said his act, which he originally filed in 2002, would close a loophole that lets lobbyists "spend millions trying to influence legislation while hiding behind empty coalitions to conceal their real clients' identities."

Ethics agency lets 'check' stand

On March 24 the Texas Ethics Commission ruled that a donation to a state official need only be reported as a check, and not a dollar amount.

Bill Ceverha, a former state representative and current member of the Texas Employee Retirement Commission board of directors, received a check from homebuilder Bob Perry.

State Rep. Lon Burnam, D-Fort Worth, asked to know the amount, but the Ethics Commission ruled otherwise.

Group submits rail-building bid

The Texas Department of Transportation accepted a bid from Cintra Zachry to build six Central Texas toll roads for $7.2 billion. The 600-mile project will run from the Texas-Oklahoma border to Mexico, with completion scheduled for 2010.

The consortium also is bidding on a high-speed freight railway to operate in the "Trans Texas Corridor."

Cintra is based in Madrid, Spain, and Zachry is based in San Antonio.
