EARLY DETECTION OF ORAL CANCER IS CRITICAL

Oral cancer is diagnosed in 30,000 Americans annually—more than two thirds of whom are men. About 8,000 Americans die of oral cancer every year, and the number is rising, especially among people under 40. Many oral cancers are squamous cell carcinomas, which can spread quickly.

Tobacco use is linked to 70 to 80 percent of all oral cancer cases. Heavy alcohol consumption is another high-risk activity. Rough teeth, dentures or restorations that chronically irritate the soft tissues of the mouth, and poor oral hygiene, also put patients at risk for oral cancer. Your dentist should perform an oral cancer screening at each oral exam.
