Mouth And Throat Cancers

More than 30,000 Americans will develop a mouth or throat cancer this year and males are twice as likely to be victims. You can play a significant role in early detection through self-examination. Here are some signs to look for: A sore throat that bleeds easily or does not heal; a lump or thickening in the cheek; pain or numbness anywhere in the mouth or on the lips.

On the lifestyle front, smoking-cigarettes, cigars, pipes, or smokeless tobacco-is a leading cause of mouth and throat cancer. Use of those products will dramatically increase the likelihood of cancer. Also, drinkers are about six times more likely to develop an oral cancer than are non-drinkers. Combine smoking and drinking, and potential for trouble goes even higher. Some studies indicate that a diet high in vegetables and fruits may help prevent oral cancer.

Because successful treatment and rehabilitation are dependent on early detection, it is extremely important to see your dentist for an oral cancer screening and regular check up at least every 6 months. Survival rates greatly increase the earlier oral cancer is discovered and treated.
