A Healthy Teeth Diet

Nutrition plays an extremely important role in our oral health, particularly during childhood. The greatest single threat to a child's oral health comes from excessive non-milk extrinsic sugars found in soda, juices, biscuits, cakes, candy and table sugar. These sugars provide almost twice the amount of food energy for most children than they should! Also of concern is the increasing practice of adding sugar to milk-related food and allowing infants to sip sugary drinks for prolonged periods of time.

The first line of defense: cut down on sugars, and immediately brush food out of teeth. At the very least, have youngsters rinse their mouths with water after meals and snacks, or chew sugarless gum. Never allow your child to fall asleep with a bottle containing milk formula, juice or sugared beverages.

A family plan to eat healthy snacks, follow a rigorous home oral care program, and regular dental checkups at our office will go a long way toward a lifetime of happy teeth and shining smiles.
