Try This Great Barbeque Chicken Recipe Tonight

For chefs and food lovers alike, chicken is akin to a painter's empty canvas.

Give a painter an empty canvas and he can paint just about anything. Along those same lines, give a chef a main course of chicken, and the results can vary greatly.

Arguably the most versatile food there is, chicken can be grilled, roasted, fried, steamed, etc. What's more, the truly delightful thing about chicken is that no two dishes seem to taste the same.

That last notion is often the result of the sauce or seasoning that goes into preparing a poultry dish.

For example, chicken marsala shouldn't taste anything like teriyaki chicken, and vice versa.

One of the more popular chicken dishes is barbecued chicken. For lovers of barbeque, the following recipe for "Barbecued Chicken" from Helen Willinsky's "Jerk from Jamaica: Barbecue Caribbean Style" (Ten Speed Press) is sure to delight even the most ardent chicken fans.

Serves 4
1/2 cup vegetable oil
1 cup cider vinegar
2 tablespoons Dry Jerk Seasoning (see below), plus more to taste
1/4 teaspoon ground white pepper
1 large egg
4 large bone-in, skin-on chicken breast halves
Prepare a low fire in a charcoal grill using a combination of charcoal and pimento wood. If you don't have pimento wood, substitute applewood or hickory, or just use charcoal. For a gas grill, preheat grill between 225 F and 275 F.

In a blender, combine the oil, the vinegar, the 2 tablespoons seasoning, the white pepper, and egg to make the barbecue sauce. Set aside.

Place the chicken on the grill, skin side down, and grill for 20 minutes, basting frequently with the sauce. Repeat on the second side, grilling for 20 minutes, or until the juices run clear when the meat is pierced. For more flavor, sprinkle generously with additional dry seasoning after cooking.

Dry Jerk Seasoning
Makes 5 tablespoons
1 tablespoon onion flakes
1 tablespoon onion powder
2 teaspoons ground dried thyme
2 teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon ground Jamaican allspice
1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1/4 teaspoon ground cinnamon
2 teaspoons sugar
2 teaspoons coarsely ground black pepper
1 teaspoon cayenne pepper
2 teaspoons dried chives or green onions

Mix together all the ingredients. Store leftover seasoning in a tightly closed glass jar. It will keep its pungency for over a month.

CANKER SORES

Canker sores are painful mouth ulcers that appear after a gradual burning or tingling sensation. The sores are often found on the inner surface of the lips, the cheeks, under the tongue, and back of the throat and are small white or yellow ulcers with a red halo around it. They usually cause pain for about four or five days, and generally resolve in 10-14 days.

The decision of how to treat canker sores should be treated is up to you and your dentist. Many times, no treatment is needed. In more severe cases, however, it should be comforting to know that your dentist has a wide arsenal of remedies available to do battle with those pesky canker sores.
