Banish the Bacteria That Causes Bad Breath
 Everyone has bad breath occasionally, usually due to bacteria from leftover food that has collected at the back of the mouth. This bacteria can release volatile sulfur compounds, which contribute to breath odor.

Flossing helps remove bacteria buildup below the gums and between teeth: brushing all oral surfaces, including the tongue, cheeks, and hard palate (roof of the mouth) after eating helps remove matter before it can break down and cause odor.

If problem persists, even though you practice good oral hygiene be sure to discuss your concerns with your dentist.
